LATEST REPORTS FROM HEADQUARTERS.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Tuesday, Nov. 4, 1862—4:10 P. M.

Last night, it was uncertain whether the possession of Ashby's Gap would be contested or not. Every preparation was made to force it, if circumstances made it necessary, but the rebels retreated, this morning, leaving our troops in undisputed possession of the mountain. From the heights, a favorable view of the Shenandoah Valley was had, but no large body of the enemy was to be seen. Winchester was plainly visible, and the intervening portion of the Valley.

The commands of cavalry and artillery under Gens. PLEASANTON and AVERILL, occupied Piedmont last night. This morning they pushed on, and after a spirited skirmish, occupied Marquette. They now hold the approaches to Manassas and Chester Gaps, on the east of the Blue Ridge Mountain.

The rebel cavalry showed themselves to-day opposite Snicker's Gap, and were also visible from the Maryland Heights.

Gen. McCLELLAN spent most of the afternoon at the top of Ashby's Gap, taking observations in the Shenandoah Valley.

SPECIAL DISPATCH FROM HARPER'S FERRY.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

The following is from our special correspondent, dated Harper's Ferry, Nov. 4:

Some of the enemy's cavalry came within two miles of our pickets at Bolivar Heights last night and carried off three men, one of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment New-York and the other two of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania. A Lieutenant reports having seen distinctly a body of cavalry, numbering at least 200 men, appear and disappear in the woods when they were taken, but too rapidly for any shots to be directed against them.

The woods on Loudon Heights are on fire and present a magnificent spectacle.

Our pickets are reported to have been driven in at Sharpsburgh last evening.

HARPER'S FERRY, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

Our correspondent sends the following:

UPPERVILLE, Tuesday, Nov. 4.

Yesterday PLEASANTON's successful pursuit of STUART was resumed. At 10 A. M. the enemy was placed in a very dangerous position, on the road leading from Union to Upperville, but after two hours' hard fighting, PLEASANTON, joined by AVERILL, drove STUART and his three thousand horsemen back till they broke and ran. They succeeded in making good their escape through Ashby's Gap.

Gen. McCLELLAN's headquarters are at present at this place.

This morning Gen. BURNS takes Col. LEGGETT's place in command of the First Division of the Ninth Army Corps.

There is every indication that both sides are seeking to bring on a great battle in this neighborhood, but citizens say the rebels spoke of their intention to get back to Richmond as speedily as possible.

It is reported this morning that AVERILL made a dash on the Manassas Gap Railroad, and seized Piedmont. Six prisoners were captured, one belonging to A. P. HILL's Division, stationed just on the other side of the Gap. Several rebel wounded are in town.

HARPER'S FERRY, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

A messenger just in from the front says that on Monday this side of Snicker's Gap, FOSTER's ammunition and supply train was twice attacked by rebel cavalry, nine of whom were taken prisoners.

Gen. GORMAN reconnoitered up to Manassas Gap on Tuesday, and to-day (Wednesday) heavy cannonading was heard in that direction.

R. G. SCROGGS informs me that Gen. Jean W. GRAY made a reconnoissance towards Shenandoah this morning, by which five rebel pickets and two deserters were captured—Ornsmanns and Ortsmannens, of the Seventh New-York. They were handed over to the Provost-Marshal.

LATEST REPORTS IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

An officer of PLEASANTON's Cavalry Brigade, who left Manassas Gap this morning, has just arrived, and reports that skirmishing had commenced before he left, and that from the steady booming of artillery which he heard while coming in, he was led to believe that at least a very heavy skirmish had been in progress at Manassas Gap throughout the day. This officer undoubtedly believes what he says, but so many false rumors to the same effect have been in circulation, that his story is regarded with suspicion.

REPORTS FROM MANASSAS JUNCTION.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

Information from Manassas Junction this morning, says that the portion of Gen. SEXTON's command sent forward to look after the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, found it in better condition than was anticipated for a point nearly up to Catlett's Station. The railroad bridge at Broad Run was found partially burned by the rebels, and its supports partly sawed through. It can, however, be easily and quickly repaired. Kettle Run bridge was found unimpaired.

Our troops hold the country in the vicinity of Broaddrick's, and have driven in the patrolling rebel pickets upon Warrenton Junction. They, however, continue to scout down as low as Catlett's Station, and will doubtless destroy the Cedar Run Bridge, if they have not already done so.

The Manassas Railroad is in pretty good working order clear up to Thoroughfare Gap.

Information received last night indicates that the total rebel force at Warrenton Junction is not more than 3,000 infantry, with corresponding numbers of cavalry and artillery.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE FROM THE ADVANCE.

LETTER FROM SNICKERSVILLE.

SNICKERSVILLE NEAR THE GAP, Sunday, Nov. 2, 1862.

The army has made an excellent day's march since morning. The weather having been warm, yet being like the Indian Summer.

FOSTER's Corps, including the fine Regulars of SYKES' Division, with WARREN's Brigade; BUTTERFIELD's Division, with HAYCOCK, and the gallant and veteran troops of MEAGHER, have thronged the valley to-day, and filled up the roads for many miles in extent. Action, as well as the fine bracing atmosphere of these Virginia mountains seemed to inspire the men with a new enthusiasm, and they would occasionally burst out into some old familiar chorus or cheerful song as they marched along. Leaving the Leesburgh road to the left, about 10 o'clock A. M., we took the road to the right, which led us through "Woody Grove" and on toward Snicker's Gap.

The people of Loudon County, it may be remembered, voted strongly against the ordinance of secession, and there are still many good Union men to be found on this line of march; but the truth of history compels me to state that most of these confessors evidently hide their light under a bushel, while their rebel neighbors are bold and outspoken in their treason.

This valley, some twenty miles long, lying between the Blue Ridge and the short mountain on the East, is by no means a rich portion of the State, the land being very stony, and much of it unproductive. The farmers are mostly of the small class, and seem contented with making both ends meet, instead of trying, like their Maryland neighbors, to improve and get rich. The old and wasteful style of cultivating the land shows that the improvements which have been introduced elsewhere, have not yet found their way into this benighted region. I have not seen a school-house nor a church during the march, though I have no doubt there are such institutions which I may have overlooked. Every mile we have traveled away from the Potomac has brought us into a more decidedly marked secession community until here, in Snickersville, (Phœbus, what a name!) they generally demand Confederate money in place of Uncle Sam's, or any other Yankee article.

THE REBELS IN OUR FRONT.

We had several intimations, during the last ten miles of our march hither, that rebel scouts were hovering on our flanks, which turned out to be true, and on more than one occasion four or five mounted rebels were seen watching at a distance the movements of our troops. Throughout the day, yesterday, we heard heavy cannonading at intervals toward the Plains Station, on the Manassas road. To-day, as we neared this point, the firing was almost incessant in our front, at a distance of some eight or ten miles, and the bursting of shells could be distinctly seen, and the rolling up of dense volumes of smoke from the batteries engaged. Judging this to be an engagement of Gen. BURNSIDE with the rebel forces which had thrown themselves between him and our advance columns, to prevent him from effecting a junction with us at Snicker's Gap, I was pressing on with all haste to the field of apparent action, when I suddenly came upon a section of a Napoleon Battery standing guard in the road, only a quarter of a mile from the centre of the village at the foot of Snicker's Gap. In a little seven by nine whitewashed cottage, Gen. MEAGHER had established his temporary headquarters, who came out and gave me his usual cordial greeting.

MAJ. O'NEIL TAKEN PRISONER.

The General informed me that only half an hour before, his Assistant Adjutant-General, Maj. THOMAS O'NEIL, had been taken prisoner by some rebel cavalry, who were just in the edge of the woods on the road leading out of the town. They have on the blue jackets of our own cavalry, and thus the more easily deceive our officers. Gen. MEAGHER directed Maj. O'NEIL to take a small guide color and proceed cautiously up the road and plant the flag where it might be seen, when, if the mounted men were our own, they would approach and make themselves known. The Major, however, proceeded straight into the line of the rebel scouts, who lay in ambush until he had passed, when they closed in behind him, and without firing a gun, demanded his surrender. He was immediately carried to the rear, and by this time is no doubt on his second journey to Richmond. Gen. MEAGHER is very much exercised of his loss, Maj. O'NEIL being a very valuable assistant at this time. He speaks of him as a very brilliant man. He belonged to the Second Battalion New-York Artillery, and for some years was connected with the Fifteenth Hussars. After making their capture, the rebels fired on our pickets and made off.

"Had the Major any papers of value on his person," I asked.

"Nothing but a song, entitled, "The Green old Flag," the General replied, with a little waggery.

"I hope he will sing it to them until they let him go again," I replied.

OCCUPYING THE GAP.

A portion of HAYCOCK's Division marched up and occupied the Gap, the Eighty-eighth New-York—Mrs. MEAGHER's own regiment—being deployed as skirmishers, with their right resting on the road, and their left on the crest of the Blue Ridge. The rebels, in large force, judging from their camps, are encamped opposite to the Gap, on the west side of the Shenandoah—some three and a half miles distant.

RENOVATED CONDITION OF THE ARMY.

The army, I think, appears in better trim, and more in the humor for an active campaign than I have ever seen them before. An excellent acquisition to the effective battery force lately added to the army is the new Napoleon guns, six pieces, light artillery, (Battery L, Ohio,) under command of Col. ROUSSEAU. They have just been transferred to Gen. SYKES' Regulars, and seem very much pleased with the change. Lieut. MEILLET—a brave and most efficient officer, who has from the first identified his fortunes with the battery—still occupies his favorite position, and seems to have dedicated himself anew to the service.

PROSPECT OF A BATTLE.

There is every prospect that the rebels will dispute our passage toward Gordonsville, should we continue the march on the present line, and a day or two may witness another colossal light on the plains of Manassas. One thing seems determined on—certain—and no word could so much gratify the public at this time.

The order, just issued by Gen. McCLELLAN, to shut up the correspondents of certain Baltimore and Philadelphia papers, or to suppress the papers themselves, unless they cease from divulging every movement of our army, admonishes me not to speculate too freely myself, or to state anything touching future plans, that is contraband. What is matter of history, or facts accomplished, is all it is possible to state with truth and safety, and quite as much as the public desires to know.

GEN. BUTTERFIELD.

The allusions to Gen. BUTTERFIELD in Gen. MARTINDALE's speech for defence, excite considerable feeling. The portion where he says Gen. BUTTERFIELD was leaving his brigade, Col. RICHARDSON, of the Twelfth New-York, says is entirely erroneous. Col. RICHARDSON says Gen. BUTTERFIELD placed him in command of the brigade, after the fight was over; that Gen. BUTTERFIELD remained behind the command all the way to Harrison's Landing, toward the enemy, and did not come in till two or three hours after his command. Gen. BUTTERFIELD himself says nothing on the subject further than that Gen. MARTINDALE had an erroneous impression probably, and will undoubtedly correct it as soon as the facts are known to him.

Hoping to give a good account from Gen. BURNSIDE in my next, I must close, to send my letter by messenger, who is just leaving.

MONDAY MORNING, 7 o'clock.

THE CAVALRY REDEEMED.

I am very happy to be able to state that Major O'NEIL has returned safe and sound to Gen. MEAGHER's headquarters. He states that he was deceived by the United States uniforms and flag carried by the squad of four mounted rebels. When he approached and saluted them, they presented their carbines, and obliged him to surrender. They then proceeded toward a church at Bloomfield, where they said they had a squadron of cavalry, but on reaching the spot the church was locked, and no cavalry in sight. Shortly afterward some cavalry pickets made their appearance, and the rebels, supposing them to be their own men, rushed up to them, and were surprised to find themselves the victims of their own decoy dodge. They proved to be some of Gen. PLEASANTON's men. Two attempted to escape, but ran into our pickets again. The others yielded with a good grace, and, with their horses, were sent to Gen. PLEASANTON's headquarters. The arrival of Major O'NEIL, after so exciting an adventure, was the theme of great rejoicing.

STUART WHIPPED BY PLEASANTON.

The events of yesterday have restored, fully, the prestige of our cavalry. Gens. PLEASANTON and AVERILL fell in with STUART's Cavalry, in the valley below, in large force, and whipped him soundly, driving him before them some six miles. They used their batteries on the rebels, and charged them with the cavalry. This accounts for the cannonading going on yesterday. The list of casualties has not come to hand.

MONDAY—8 A. M.

The order assigning Gen. BUTTERFIELD to Gen. SYKES' Division, of Gen. BURNSIDE's Corps, has been countermanded, and he has been placed in command of the division formerly known as MCDOWELL's.

The weather is cold and blowy. E. S.

LETTER FROM PHILAMONT.

The Bulk of the Rebel Army Reported to Have been Retreating for Several Days—Important Reconnoissances—Skirmishes—Casualties, &c.

PHILAMONT, VA., 29 MILES FROM THE POTOMAC, Monday, Nov. 3, 1862.

For the first time the people of this little secesh village gazed upon a live "Yankee." The sight of so many of them naturally causes a distending of eyes, mouth and profile generally. Our cavalry, under Gen. PLEASANTON, are in advance of this place some three miles, while the infantry and cavalry baggage-wagons, &c., are scattered back nearly to the river. I have conversed with some few Unionists here, who inform me that the bulk of the rebel army has been retreating for several days, and that all their movements on the other side of the mountain are mere feints to cover their retreat, which is being conducted in admirable order. In a few days more, and they will be safely stowed away on the Rappahannock River or in the vicinity of Gordonsville. The roads are very fine; indeed, I question whether less cursing and profanity is general was ever before heard from teamsters, baggage-masters, &c., on a march.

By glancing at the map you will perceive that turnpikes lead out from here in the direction of Leesburgh, Winchester, Fairfax and Ashby's Gap, where the enemy are now said to be crossing the mountains, JACKSON having gone through a few days since. You will remember that "Stonewall" and A. P. HILL suddenly appeared at Charlestown, seven miles from Harper's Ferry, last week. This move was undoubtedly made just before his departure in order to deceive us. But we have learned his "games" to perfection, and whenever he now puts on a bold front, as if intending to attack, we at once set him down for an immediate retreat. Many of the rebels are scattering through the mountains between Snicker's Gap, five miles from here, and Loudon Heights. On Saturday some forty of them appeared about three miles from Harper's Ferry, near to where one of the Pennsylvania Regiments were on picket, and one of them was shot. A spy was recently captured in Gen. PLEASANTON's camp with an entire list of the infantry, cavalry and artillery regiments, which comprise the advance. Instead of being shot on the spot, he was taken under guard to Berlin.

On Friday last, the Fifty-third Pennsylvania, Col. JOHN R. BROOKE, started from near Hillsboro on a reconnoissance, in the direction of Woodville, going to within two miles of that place. No enemy were seen. Scouts on top of the Blue Ridge, the same day, reported that no signs of the enemy could be seen between Charlestown and Berryville, fourteen miles distant, with the exception of a cavalry force which was prowling around the former place. A rifle-pit was discovered near the Shenandoah, but was unoccupied.

A most important reconnoissance was made last week in the direction of Snicker's Gap, by the Eighth New-York Regiment, Col. DAVIS, who so gallantly led the cavalry out of Harper's Ferry on the night before its surrender. The object was to ascertain if the enemy were there in force. Coming upon the rebel pickets this side of Snickersville, they drove them mile after mile, capturing four, who had had their horses shot under them. When within quarter of a mile of the village, two squadrons formed in line of battle, while a third was sent forward to feel the enemy round the bend of the road leading up the mountain. The advance guard and the first platoon of the main column, were suffered to pass round the bend, when a masked gun, accurately aimed, was fired. Five horses were disabled, and their riders killed or wounded. They were William Smith, John Van Tine, Nelson Smith, Frank Parker, George W. Clark. Henry Griffith was injured by having his horse fall upon him. Capt. FOX's horse, of Company A, was struck by a piece of shell and became unmanageable, and the frightened steed started off with his rider in the direction of the enemy. With wonderful presence of mind, the Captain managed to disengage his foot from the stirrup and guide his horse between two trees. As the animal passed under them, he seized hold of the limbs, saved himself and returned to the camp in the night. One of the others who was dismounted lay concealed in the bushes, and reports that a large force of the enemy followed in pursuit, but stopping to squabble over the trappings of the disabled horses, and he in the meantime escaped. LETTER FROM LEESBURGH.

A Visit to Leesburgh—Interesting Interview with John Janney, President of the Virginia Secession Convention.

LEESBURGH, VA., Saturday, Nov. 1, 1862.

Armed with Mr. YARDLEY TAYLOR's admirable map of Loudon County, on which every pike, road, by-path and forest trail is drawn, and every house even in the county marked, one traverses the region now occupied by the Army of the Potomac with the greatest ease and comfort. The people, very many of them loyal, and not yet possessed with the mercenary spirit which the presence of troops inspires, still retain their free Old Virginia hospitality, and as food for man and beast is in abundance, the country picturesque in the highest degree, and the weather such as the Indian Summer in its perfection brings, it must be a sluggish and insensible nature indeed that would not enjoy the present campaign in the Old Dominion.

My last letter was dated from the Quaker settlement at Goose Creek, near Purcellville, whence I yesterday rode out on a detour along the extreme Southern line of this county, where our cavalry videttes posted in the woods, are face to face with those of the enemy, of whose numbers, position and purpose we still remain but ill informed. Finding nothing of interest here, present or prospective, I struck the Winchester and Leesburgh pike, and proceeded along seven miles, to the last named place, which has figured so largely in the current history of operations in Virginia. This "pike" (the popular local abbreviation of turnpike,) is a noble graded highway; but, unfortunately, like all the good roads of the region, it runs east and west—toward the marts of Baltimore, Alexandria and Washington. If equally good highways led southward, the fact would add a hundred per cent. to the facility and rapidity of army movements. There is nothing of interest to recount by the way; the wonted sprinkling of Virginia "villas," of the three-house and a Methodist church order; and only an occasional clump of planets, by the cross-roads, eager to examine passers, to indicate the existence of war. About half a mile from the city of Leesburgh a hill, formed by an intrusive upheaval of trap-rock, rises abruptly from the surrounding plain, and gives a superb view of the whole surrounding country—Leesburgh nestling prettily below, the Catoctin range to the east, the Blue Ridge to the west, the Potomac facing you a couple of miles off—hard by Ball's Bluff—fatal name; northward, far off into Maryland, and southward to the Bull Run Mountains, which from all present indications and probabilities, is destined to be the scene of the next great battle. On the summit of the trap hill stands Fort Johnson—an extensive earthwork thrown up by the rebels fifteen months ago, now abandoned, and the guns all removed; but the log cabins, ten or a dozen in number, where the garrison lived during last Winter, still remain. A jolly negro with a team was briefly engaged removing the logs from one of the cabins for firewood; and a few bars of railroad iron, which the rebels had cut up, and used for ammunition, lay strewn around. It is most commandingly placed, and would do fearful work on an enemy moving on Leesburgh.

Of Leesburgh (a small town of a couple of thousand population) there is little or nothing to tell at this late day, when the region is so well known by previous descriptions, and when prospective events of a far more stimulating character forestall the public attention. It is now held and occupied by Gen. SIGEL's command, forming the extreme left of the left wing of the Army of the Potomac. The inhabitants are intensely and all but universally secessionist in their sentiments. Their last great grievance, on which each man and woman youmest inevitably opens upon you, is the shelling of the town by "the Yankees, (or "your people," as they phrase it,) about six weeks ago. The act, they aver, was entirely unprovoked and uncalled for, and was carried into effect without even giving the women and children warning to be withdrawn. Nobody, however, was hurt; but the bombardment actually took place, for several shells entered the hotel here, one passing through the room I occupy and taking off the top of one of the bedposts. The town is in the torpor which beseils all Virginia towns just now—stores, schools and Courts all closed—and the place wears a kind of petrified, Pompeiian air. The people, though abating not a jot of their secessionism, are yet civil—that kind of civility which civilized, well-bred belligerents bear to each other.

Nothing and nobody in all Leesburgh interested me but one white-haired old Virginia gentleman, of whom history will have a word to say. I mean JOHN JANNEY, the President of the Virginia Convention at Richmond that voted the State out of the Union, and whose home is in this town. In the Convention he constantly and persistently voted against every measure looking in any way whatever toward secession, though, as its President, he had to affix his name to a document which he considered the death-warrant and suicide of the State. Knowing that when he afterward returned home, and the time for the popular vote came, he voted for secession, I was curious to know what influences had worked this interior change in a high and pure-souled nature.

Calling at his residence, I was received with cordiality by the tall, spare figure with a noble white chevelure, whose every lineament, and the high, courtly, stately manners plainly showed the fine old Virginia gentleman. Mr. JANNEY is now about sixty-five, and has been of late months in feeble health. It was not difficult, presently, to carry the conversation from present affairs and give it a historical turn. It did not need his avowal to inform me that he had been all along an Old Line HENRY CLAY Whig, and that he had long kept himself aloof from practical politics; it was easy to see that, such as they have been North and South, they must have offended his honest temper. It was a little remarkable, therefore, that he should have been chosen the presiding officer of the Convention on the question of secession, and the choice of so conservative, Union-loving a man, showed there was some moderation and virtue in the body. The Convention met, you will remember, in the middle of February of '61; and he laid great stress on the thoroughly Union sentiment that pervaded it during its earlier sessions. If a vote on the question had been taken any time during the month preceding the attack on Fort Sumter, three-fourths at least of all the voices would have been against the ordinance. When that event took place the sensitive mercury on the instant leaped up in the barometer. "Was the attack purposely timed to effect the deliberations of the body—was the fuse set at the right length to carry the shell where wanted?" "There is too much reason to fear it was." The Union party in the Convention, however, still struggled on. They sent delegates to Washington—begging, imploring some assuring word, some basis of hope, some promise which they could present to their people. "And Mr. S., I am bound to tell you we got encouragement rather than encouragement." Unable thus to get any rallying point the Union party was overslaughed by the disunionists, and the secession was voted by a large majority, Mr. JANNEY, with some others, holding out to the last. The Convention dissolved, the members went home, the popular vote, without whose ratification the action of the body was "naught and nothing more," was about to come on; but before the day arrived Mr. LINCOLN bound Virginia with the blockade and invaded her soil by marching troops into Alexandria! When the time for the popular vote came JOHN JANNEY gave his voice for secession. The invasion, State-Rights and the old time traditions had done their work. "Sir, I am, in a word, a Virginian—a citizen of a Commonwealth that had existed as a sovereign organized government for two hundred years before the United States had a name." Such, in a sentence, is the history of the lapse of thousands of the best and purest men of Virginia—men who are now the mainstay of the rebellion in the counsel and in the field. And certainly there could have been no condition of mind more favorable to the purposes of the such plotters of disunion than they found in the principles, prejudices and traditions of Virginians.

I thought, however, that I could detect a dawning consciousness in the mind of Mr. JANNEY of how he, and conservative-minded men like him, had been used by the South Carolina fire-eaters. I felt delicate of pressing him on these matter points, but the rebellion has obviously in his mind not a clean bill of record. The secession of South Carolina and the Gulf States he regards as a gigantic crime—unprovoked, uncalled for, unauthorized, illegal and diabolical. Next to this, he accounts the acceptance by the Washington Government of the attack on Fort Sumter as a challenge to war, followed by the calling out of seventy-five thousand men, as a grand political blunder. He execrates Mr. BUCHANAN—whom he looks upon as the weakest and meanest of all the tools ever used by a tyrannical faction—for not reinforcing Fort Sumter at a time when it could have been done without giving offence; but he also blames Mr. LINCOLN for treating as a casus for war an affair that statesmanship would have made a diplomatic transaction of. The lack of that same statesmanship now is, he thinks, our great trouble; for he considers there is none of it on either side. "Read the Constitution, and you will see that the office of the President is carved out for the limbs of a giant; and who have you there, and who have we?" "Sir, there were, in my day, giants in the land, and we have now only pigmies."

As for the prospects of the Southern Confederacy, he had nothing but dark prophecies. That secession will stop with the present split he has not the faintest idea. There are antagonistic elements already at work that must ere long make new fractures. The radical opposition of interests on the tariff question will make a Virginia and Border State Confederacy, or attempt at Confederacy, before half a generation is past. I asked him whether, if the Confederate forces should be driven out of Virginia, and a new popular vote ordered, there would be a chance of the rescinding of the Ordinance of Secession and the return of the State to the Union. "None, none whatever. The wrongs, oppressions and violences of the Washington Government have been too great, the alienation of the people too intense, ever to make that possible." I asked him about the circumstances attending the popular vote, and whether from the local intimidation it could be considered a fair one; and I recalled to his mind Mr. BARNES's declaration at the time, that if there was any man in Virginia not prepared to vote secession he should leave the State. So far as he knew, it was made with perfect intrepidity and freedom; as far Mr. MASON's speech, it was not the first or only foolish thing that person had said. "But do you suppose that any Virginian voted against his conscience on account of such a declaration?" Do you not think that we should be together—that Union is desirable? "Why it is written on the very face of the geography," (illustrating it by examples.) "Ah! if it were but all over, and things were as they used to be! But there is no hope; both parties will go on until each is utterly exhausted and ruined, and is ready to welcome peace and protection brought by any iron-handed military despot. The experiment of Republican Constitutional Government—of liberty regulated by law—I consider a failure. There is not a shadow of Constitutional Government on either side." The President's Emancipation Proclamation he looks upon as the greatest political blunder possible, and he is curious to know what extraordinary pressure must have been brought to bear on him to issue it, after his declaration to the Chicago delegates. It will solidify, unite and intensify all the hostilities, hatreds and animosities of the South. "But do these sentiments amount to much in the long run?" "It is true that, in the long run, every people is governed by its conviction of its own interests." "But, difficult though reunion may at present seem, is not everything more easy than disunion?" "I confess I see nothing between Union and chaos; but how is it to be done? One thing I know, if my vision of how it can be settled were as clear as my desire is intense that it should be settled, the war would speedily be at an end."

I give you but the salient points of a conversation prolonged till midnight. The next morning at 8, by invitation, I breakfasted with him and Mrs. JANNEY—they having no children. He is a man to love and revere, and I parted from him inspired with a deep and affectionate regard for his pure and lofty nature. W. S.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE

Trouble with the Flag of Truce Boats at Aiken's Landing.

Extracts From Late Richmond Papers.

REBEL NEWS FROM NORTHERN VIRGINIA.

Danger to Mobile, Charleston and Savannah.

Another Rebel Pirate Ready to Sail.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, Nov. 4.

The flag-of-truce boat Express arrived at Fortress Monroe from Aiken's Landing last evening just as the Baltimore boat was leaving the wharf. She brought no passengers or returned prisoners. Our officers and guard, while at the landing, were treated rather rudely by the rebel guard, no one being allowed to step on shore. Col. AIKEN, (one of the rebel Commissioners,) was not allowed to come on to the wharf while the Express lay there. The Colonel's commission has been taken from him, and he is denied all communication whatever.

EXTRACTS FROM THE RICHMOND PAPERS.

ADVICES FROM NORTHERN VIRGINIA.

The Richmond Dispatch of Nov. 1, says: "The recent movements of our forces indicate the entire evacuation of Northern Virginia, or that these movements were made in reference to the reported advance of McCLELLAN through Loudon County. From all we can gather, we are satisfied that a general advance of the enemy's forces is not anticipated, and that our Government, which desires such a movement on the part of McCLELLAN, will be disappointed for the present. The operations of the enemy, so far as inspired, do not indicate that they will risk an engagement with the well-appointed and highly disciplined troops of Gen. LEE.

From Winchester, and the country below, we have advices up to Thursday, when no movement of the enemy had taken place along the Upper Potomac. The report that Winchester had been evacuated is incorrect. Our cavalry pickets still hold their old positions north of Bunker Hill and east of Charlestown."

ABUSES IN THE ARMY.

"A close investigation into the management of the Commissary's and Quartermaster's departments would disclose a degree of mischievous activity inexcusable, and well calculated to depreciate the currency of the Government, if it had no other evil effect. In conversation with a number of farmers from the valley, recently, we were frequently asked the question whether the Government intended to redeem its circulation, the inference being drawn from its unnecessary expenditure that Confederate money was only being used for the present exigency, and that final repudiation would cause from the extravagance of the Government's commissioned agents."

PRISONERS OF WAR.

"Forty prisoners of war arrived in this city (Richmond) last evening via the Central train. They were captured last Saturday in the vicinity of Harper's Ferry."

COMING EVENTS.

"It is evident that Mobile, Charleston, and probably Savannah, will soon be assailed by the naval and land forces of the Lincoln Government. The loss of these cities would not touch the vital strength of the South, yet it would inflict suffering and humiliation which no sacrifice would be too great to prevent.

Mobile can see in New-Orleans what she has to expect. The occupation of Mobile by the Federals would enable them to penetrate hundreds of miles into the interior of Alabama, and inflict immense damage upon private and public interests. Charleston, an especial object of Federal malignity, would probably be made to drink the bitterest cup of all, if she was to fall into Yankee hands. We hope that every Southern city will permit itself to be converted into ashes before surrendering to the invaders."

THE YELLOW FEVER AT WILMINGTON.

The Richmond Whig, of the 1st, says:

"The Wilmington Journal, of Oct. 30, says the number of burials the previous day were, white five. The negroes are going off much more rapidly than at the outset of the epidemic. The weather is cool and no signs of frost."

THE CAPTURE OF THE SCOTIA.

The Charleston Mercury gives an account of the capture of the steamship Scotia, while on her way from Nassau to that port. She was commanded by Capt. T. S. Lamar, of Charleston, the same who ran a privateer from that port, was captured, and made his escape from the Yankees at Boston. The Scotia when captured had on board a valuable cargo—300 tons of merchandise, consisting of shoes, blankets, &c.

ANOTHER REBEL PIRATE.

"Letters of marque and reprisal have been issued to a certain officer of a splendid vessel, which is to sail soon from some Confederate port. The second officer is Col. CHARLES CARROLL HOWE, who, six several months past, has rendered efficient service to the Government."

THE SHENANDOAH AND OHIO RAILROAD.

The Whig says that Gen. JACKSON has destroyed of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from the North Mountain to Shepherdstown, tearing up the rails and burning the ties. The large machine shops and other buildings at Martinsburgh were fired and destroyed.

THE CONSCRIPTION UNPOPULAR.

The Whig also says:

"The Secretary of War has caused an order to be issued to officers commanding camps of instruction to cause the enrollment of conscripts to be extended to all men not subject to exemption, who are between 18 and 45 years of age. It cannot be disguised that the law under which this is done is unpopular, if not odious, among a large class of the people."

A STORY FROM NEW-ORLEANS.

Recently the British man-of-war Rinaldo approached the foot of Canal-street, New-Orleans, and assumed a hostile attitude, demanding from the authorities the release of JAMES LYNN, druggist, an English subject, confined in Fort Pickens, and indemnification for the seizure of his person and property, to the amount of $100,000. Gen. BUTLER responded five days to consult with Washington authorities, which was assented to. The Captain of the Rinaldo is an officer of great gallantry, and whose sympathies are said to be warmly in favor of the South.

Gen. BUTLER has issued another infamous order, forbidding the payment of debts to persons who have not taken the oath."

A Schooner Ashore.

BARNEGAT'S HARBOR, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

The tug Lady Franklin, just arrived, reports that a large black topsail schooner, name unknown, is ashore on Point Pedinacle.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

AN ENGLISHMAN ON THE SLAVE POWER.

THE SLAVE POWER: Its Character, Career, and Probable Designs; being an Attempt to Explain the Real Issues Involved in the American Contest. By J. E. CAIRNES, M. A. 8vo., pp. 111. New-York: CARLETON, Publisher.

We have already indicated in a general way, the signal excellence of this work. The more it is examined, the greater will be the surprise that so complete and accurate an exposition of the causes and character of our rebellion could have been made by a foreigner, who, we believe, has never visited our shores. No American, however intelligent, can read this book without interest and positive instruction. Its success is largely due to a most patient and complete acquisition of all the facts bearing upon the subject, and an interpretation of these facts in the light of luminous political science. Its author is the Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy in Queen's College, Galway, and its substance was originally offered in the shape of a course of lectures given in the University of Dublin. The clear, philosophic analysis which distinguishes the work, appertains to the scientific professor, but what has enabled him yet more to penetrate to the heart of the matter, is a deep, hearty sympathy that belongs solely to the man. Professor CAIRNES understands our cause, not simply because he has collected the facts and studied the principles, but because he has felt the ties of human brotherhood—not simply because his hand has been diligent and his head clear, but because his heart has been in the right place.

The author first establishes that the rebellion is due to the intolerant, grasping, insatiable character of Slavery, and that alone. He shows that the domestic history of our country, from the agitation of the Missouri question in 1820, down, has been one record of aggressions by the Slave Power. He shows that these political tendencies of the Slave Power are determined in a principal degree by the economic necessities under which it is placed; the first of which is territorial and practically unlimited, on account of its speedy exhaustion of the soil. He explains how, of necessity, the policy of a slaveholding society must in essence be an oligarchy, whatever be the political mold in which it is cast—a despotism in the last degree unscrupulous and impatient of control, wielded by a wealthy few. He proves that Slavery has not merely determined the general form and character of the social and political economy of the Southern States, but that its spirit has entered into the soul of the people, and has generated a code of ethics and a type of Christianity adapted to its peculiar requirements, and adverse to all the moral instincts. That which the necessity for fresh soil is to the political economy of slaveholding communities, a lust of power is to their morality. The Southerner finds that his single path to power lies through the maintenance and extension of the peculiar institution; and to this he devotes himself with both the zeal and the unscrupulousness of a fanatic. The author establishes incontrovertibly that the Slave Power is of necessity aggressive, and that it must either rule or ruin. He devotes several chapters to the manner in which it has ruled for the last generation, and to its breaking up of the Union when it could rule no longer. He demonstrates that this domineering and aggressive character, inherent in slave society, would be unchanged by Independence; that the Confederacy would make every effort to renew the African slave-trade, to dismember Mexico, to appropriate Cuba, and in every way to strengthen and aggrandize itself in defiance of the civilized world.

Prof. CAIRNES is emphatic on the injustice and impolicy of intervention, maintaining that it is alike forbidden by the dictates of selfish policy and by the maxims of morality and law. Its consequence, he is confident, would be a general war. But while he is strenuous for neutrality he still considers it the duty of Europe to give its unqualified moral support to the North. To the plea for the South which has been used in Europe with greater effect than any other, that the forcible imposition on some millions of human beings of a form of government at variance with their wishes, is a great political wrong, and that the North cannot be justified in attempting it, he replies with great force. As a liberal publicist, he freely admits the truth of the general principle; but justly says that the conduct of England toward India (and he might have added Ireland) evinces that the English mind recognizes that this principle is not of universal application, and depends much on circumstances. He declares that if ever there was an exceptional case, it is the present, and thus puts it:

"What is the fact with which we have to deal? A few hundred thousand slaveholders break loose from the political system with which they were content, and erect a Confederacy on the avowed basis of Slavery. From the past history of these men, and from the condition of society presented in the country which they govern, we have the clearest grounds as to what this scheme involves. We know that it involves the maintenance of a social system at once retrograde and aggressive—retrograde toward those on whom it is imposed, and aggressive toward the communities with which it comes into contact. We know that it involves the design of establishing the power of the Confederacy, and with its power, the worst form of human servitude which mankind has ever seen, over the fairest portion of the New World. We know that in all efforts—in fact, in a probability approaching to certainty—it involves an attempt to revive a great scandal, the African Slave trade—a crime which all Christian nations have agreed to stigmatize, and which Great Britain in particular has for half a century devoted her best influence, and a vast outlay of treasure, to suppress. We know that this body aims at political independence, not for that inward purpose, making room, political independence has first of national rights—the purpose of working out a people's proper destiny—but for a purpose which makes it the greatest of national crimes—the purpose of rivetting despotism upon another race—the purpose of extending and consolidating a barbarous tyranny. Now, these being the ends for which the Southern Confederacy seeks to establish itself, is its subjugation by the North justifiable? I hold that the right is as clear as that it is not lawful to put down murder or piracy. As a nation, we, in common with civilized Europe, have prohibited as piracy the African Slave trade. In the opinion of competent judges, the interstate Slave trade in the South is quite as cruel, as great as any that have been enacted on the coast of Guinea or in the middle passage; and it is certain that the purposes for which the Confederacy is established—the appropriation of the Territories for slave cultivation—cannot be carried into effect without giving a powerful impulse certainly to one, and probably to both, of these crimes. Unless, therefore, we are prepared to retreat from the position which, as a nation, we have deliberately taken up, and consistently held for half a century, we cannot deny that the overthrow of the Southern Confederacy would be a public benefit; and, even though we should question the perfect purity of the motives of those who undertake it, the act itself must be acknowledged as a service to the civilized world.

"But the overthrow of the Southern Confederacy is justifiable—so far as the duties of the North in that matter are concerned—appears to me, therefore, as clear as any decree in the code of political ethics."

Having thus shown the justifiableness of the attempt to reduce the South again to the Federal Constitution, the author proceeds to consider its practicableness. Without pronouncing definitely on this point, he shows that the facilities for this end are greater than is commonly supposed in Europe, and particularly designates our blockade, which may be made to cut off necessary supplies, the number and extent of railways in the South which overcome the old impediment of distance, and the existence of an unfriendly servile population of four millions in its midst. He has no hesitation in saying on this last point, that "so soon as the South is once thoroughly penetrated by the Northern armies, a collapse of its productive system is inevitable." There is one more question which he asks: "Whether reconstruction is expedient." The author thinks not, and here alone we think his views defective. He holds that the Southern people, if conquered, would remain "thoroughly disaffected," that despotic expedients would have to be exercised to keep them from relapse, and thus a temper of arbitrary sway would be formed which would, in the end, be the death of all constitutional government. The great failing of the Professor in this argument is, that he makes no proper allowance for the part which the non-slaveholders of the South, whose real interests are antagonistic to the owners of slaves, and identified with what will henceforth be the free-labor policy of the Federal Government, may, by judicious management, be made to play in the reconstruction of the Union. This class constitute the vast majority of the Southern people, and were in no wise responsible for the rebellion except as they were betrayed into it. The time, we believe, will come when they will understand how basely they have been deceived, and will better comprehend their true relations to the Slave Power, which, for its own selfish ends, has brought upon them such calamity and disgrace. Terrible experience like theirs often has a miraculous effect in illuminating and converting. The author does not weigh this at all, nor does he sufficiently weigh the influence which the extensive colonization of the South by free settlers from the North must have upon the political and social system of the South. Nor does he take into account the effect of the general emancipation of the negro, which was not anticipated when he wrote, but which the Emancipation Proclamation of the President has now made almost inevitable. The negroes once at liberty, could never be reenslaved; but the strong arm of the Government would be absolutely necessary to keep them in order. The very safety of all Southern society would be dependent upon the constant and faithful exercise of the National power. This would have an immense, we may say, in irresistible influence in keeping Southern society true to the authority protecting it. But it is useless to dwell upon this. Every intelligent loyal American knows that the restoration of the Union is not a question of expediency at all. It is a thing of necessity. We are surprised that Prof. CAIRNES himself, clear thinker as he is, should not have discerned that it must be an absolute impossibility for any civilized nation to live side by side with such a monster as he has truly depicted the Confederacy to be. We wonder how he could have failed to see that the dominating spirit in which the creature was conceived must be the law of its being; and that there is no such thing as living with it or near it in peace.

Notwithstanding its lame conclusion, the volume deserves to be read by every reflecting American. Its few errors would have probably been avoided had the author written from the present position of affairs, and can now hardly mislead. But its thousand salutary truths remain as potent as ever, and cannot be too closely brought home. We need to be invigorated by just such forcible confirmations that Truth and Right are with us.

FROM PARIS.

The Changes in the French Ministry—The Emperor the Enemy of Italian Unity—An Explanation of His Course.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

PARIS, Friday, Oct. 17, 1862.

French politics, after a long period of stagnation, have now become exciting, and I therefore address you a letter. The announcement in yesterday's Moniteur that M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS had been appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs, vice THOUVENEL, "whose resignation is accepted," marks a turning point in the modern history of Europe, and requires a good deal of explanation. The Emperor having, up to the last possible moment, deceived his own Ministers, together with Italy and the world at large, as to his intentions respecting Rome, has at length shown the cloven foot, and by acts, more eloquent than words, proclaimed himself the enemy of Italian unity, and the accomplice of the ultramontane clique which supports the temporal power through thick and thin. I am not exaggerating; I merely repeat almost word for word what the Ministers who have been made fools of say to their personal friends. Poor GARIBALDI, who now lies groaning on that bed of pain at Varignano, from which it is doubtful whether he will ever arise—GARIBALDI, in whose festering wound yet lurks the fratricidal ball impelled by the cold-blooded mandate of the Tuileries, knew right well when he set out on his desperate expedition to the cry of "Rome or death," that Italy had nothing to hope for from the good will of NAPOLEON III.; and in his grand soul, (over-estimating, no doubt, the valor and energy of the great body of his countrymen,) judged that the only chance of consolidating the Italian Kingdom was for all Italy to rise as one man, force the Emperor's hand, and compel him either to give Italy her Capital, or to claim at once upon a great war—which the state of French finances, the traditions of Magenta and Solferino, the opinions of the ever-growing liberal party in France, and the jealousy and suspicion of other European Powers, would have rendered highly perilous to him and his dynasty. But VICTOR EMANUEL and his Minister, RATTAZZI, were made to believe by repeated dispatches from Paris, written in all good faith by M. PIETRI, the Italian Ambassador, as the result of his conferences with M. THOUVENEL, that if the Italian Government should show itself strong enough to put down GARIBALDI and to maintain order in Italy, the French army would evacuate Rome within a very short delay. It was on the strength of these assurances, and in the hope of securing so great an object that VICTOR EMANUEL, with sorrow in his heart, permitted the grievous attack on GARIBALDI at Aspromonte. It was on the strength of these assurances that the King told a deputation at Forli that he would be in Rome before the end of the year. When GARIBALDI was wounded and captured, and his followers thoroughly put down, M. THOUVENEL, who stood committed in the Italian Government by the promises which he had conceived himself authorized to make in the Emperor's name, thought it high time to take some action in fulfillment of them. In these views he was ardently seconded by M. DE PARIEUSY, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and M. FOULD, the Finance Minister. But the Emperor was sea-bathing at Biarritz, and so absorbed in the care of his health and in correcting the proofs of his history of JULIUS CÆSAR, that none of his ministers could get a word from him on Roman affairs. M. FOULD, who, as dictator in the important department of finance, might be supposed to have more than an ordinary Minister's influence, went to Biarritz, on purpose to discuss the affairs of Rome, but the Emperor cut him short by saying that the matter must stand over till his return to Paris. Thereupon M. THOUVENEL proposed by telegraph that, at any rate, the dispatches showing the obstinacy of the Court of Rome should be published, in order to let the public see what progress had been made. This the Emperor at first refused, but in order to prevent M. THOUVENEL's resignation at that time, he consented, and the Moniteur of Sept. 23 published those documents, which led nine-tenths of the world to believe that the Emperor's patience was exhausted, and that, as the Pope intrenched himself in an inflexible non possumus, refused all compromise, and made the restoration of Ancona, Bologna, and the other territory already taken from him by Piedmont a condition precedent to even the slightest return in the Papal Government, the French army would be withdrawn from its ungrateful and impracticable prestige, and he left face to face with his subjects. A promise was to have been exacted from the King of Italy not to invade Rome, and thus the constant boast of the Cardinals that the Pope is betrayed by his subjects would have been put to a practical test which it would not have lain in his mouth to complain of. The practical result, as every one sees, would have been that the temporal power would not have lasted twenty-four hours after the departure of the last French soldier. The Roman people, by an overwhelming majority, would have declared themselves subjects of the King of Italy. The Pope, indeed, would not have remained to face them, but, in accordance with his frequent declarations, would have taken to flight the moment the French garrison began to evacuate.

Well, up to the end of last week the Emperor's official advisers were in the full belief that the great Roman question was about to be solved on the principle above indicated. They were aware of the intrigues of the Empress. They knew that LA GUERRONNIERE's reactionary journal, La France, was subsidized and directly inspired by her. They apprehended, perhaps, that the Emperor's lingering doubts and scruples and his unwillingness to offend the clergy by any appearance of harsh dealing with the Pope, might breed difficulty of detail and further delay; but they were one and all under the impression that the Emperor had been brought to recognize the evacuation of Rome as a great State necessity, and that a step would at once be taken toward the realization of the admitted principle. What then was their surprise, when, at the first Ministerial Council held at St. Cloud, after the Emperor's return from Biarritz, M. THOUVENEL, the moment he began to talk about Rome, was interrupted by the Emperor, who, twirling his moustache, said quietly, that inasmuch as he had made up his mind to maintain the statu quo at Rome, it was useless to waste any time in discussing the subject. Nothing more was said at the moment, and the Council proceeded to discuss financial and commercial matters. But the next day the leading Ministers met together, and resolved that they had been deceived and deluded by their Imperial master to such an extent that it was impossible for them, with any decent regard to their personal dignity, to continue in office. They had successively individual interviews with the Emperor to remonstrate with him, but without success, and on Tuesday last, five Ministers at least, M. M. FOULD, THOUVENEL, DE PARIEUSY, ROUHER, and another (whose name I do not at this instant remember) tendered their joint and several resignations. The Emperor, without yielding a peg, made an appeal to their loyalty and devotion to his person, not to resign all in a lump, on account of the scandal, and above all, of the panic at the Bourse, which such a collective step would occasion. They had not sufficient firmness to turn a deaf ear to such a supplication, from such a quarter; and although my personal opinion is that the truer patriotism would have been to have persevered at any cost, yet I cannot but make every allowance for M. FOULD when I know that his resignation, under the circumstances, would have caused a fall of two or three per cent in the public funds. I must, however, inform you, and that on the surest information, that the Ministerial crisis is not over, and that although the resignation of M. THOUVENEL is the only one yet announced by the Moniteur as "accepted," the acceptance of others still tendered, will follow with more or less rapidity.

M. DE PARIEUSY, I am enabled to state confidently, will go very soon. M. FOULD only holds his place until a convenient moment for finding a successor without occasioning a monetary crisis. That eventuality may possibly be postponed for some time.

M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS, the new Minister for Foreign Affairs, passes for a man of high personal character. Without indorsing the opinions which would put him on a very elevated pedestal, I quite admit that by contrast with many of his colleagues, he is a most respectable man indeed. He is no pecunious speculator and stock-jobber, like many of them in high places. His private fortune is large, and he showed his contempt for mere money considerations in resigning (in 1856) his Senatorship, with its income of 30,000 francs a year, in a fit of disgust at the hunting of a letter written by the Emperor, complaining that the Senate did not make sufficient use of the initiatory powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. He had previously (in 1855) resigned the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, on the break-up of the Vienna Conference, which resulted in the Crimean war. From his having been opposed to the war with Russia, it is inferred that he is now a man of peace, and therefore the Bourse inclines to view his appointment with favor. On the other hand, he passes for a personal enemy of Lord PALMERSTON, and therefore he may be expected to weaken, if possible, still more that "English alliance," which has long existed only in name. At all events, he comes into power with reference to the Russian question, as a reactionary Minister in the most unqualified sense. He was LOUIS NAPOLEON's Minister when Rome was first invaded in 1848, and as the France, with a dire chuckle now very justly observes, the man who advised war to restore the Pope to Rome, is not now very likely to expel him from the Holy City.

The present Ministerial modification will give a universal impetus to the Garibaldi meetings in England. I quite agree with the opinion expressed in the London Sun, of Oct. 16, that the tendency of the French reactionary policy is war. And in this connection, I beg to call your attention to the importance of an official decree in this day's Moniteur, so worded as that the significance of it would not strike a casual reader. Marshal CANROBERT is gazetted to the command left vacant at Lyons by Marshal CASTELLANE's death. That is all matter-of-course enough—that General officer being (after MAGNAN, in command at Paris,) the senior French Marshal. But the remarkable thing is, that Marshal MACMAHON, Duke of Magenta, who succeeds CANROBERT at Nancy, remains also in his high command at Lille, so that he commands two corps d'armée sédentaires on the Belgian and Rhine frontiers. This is the first time that such a large command has been given to a single officer; and inasmuch as MACMAHON is looked upon as the first fighting General, and has been closeted with the Emperor very often lately, I look upon the nomination as highly important.

I had much more to say, but must close for post. I shall write again next Tuesday. Meanwhile, I will ask you not to be misled by the lying assertions of the French Government journals, that the Ministerial crisis was brought to an end by the appointment of DROUYN DE L'HUYS. My last word is, that the crisis still continues.

A Remarkable October.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The month of October has been so remarkable for great heat that I think a few statistics may not be unworthy of a place in your truly valuable paper. I will therefore commence by stating that the average temperature of the first sixteen days was warmer than that of any corresponding period during the entire term from 1845 to 1861, both included. But this is not the most striking feature. On the 4th, the mercury rose to 81°, and on the 7th, 8th and 9th to 80°, 80°, and 81°, making four days up to or above 80°, whereas the whole number in all the seventeen previous years combined is only three, viz.: 85° and 80° on October 8 and 9, 1846, and 80° on October 8, 1861.

Thus it will be seen that we have had the highest degrees by 5° and 2° in 1862, and the highest date 1846 by 4° and 9°.

In addition to this, the thermometer never fell below 19° until the 20th-21st, when it descended during the night to 24°, on the morning of the 24th to 30°, and on the 25th to 22°, making only two mornings as low as and only one lower than the freezing point, an occurrence unprecedented in any October of my record. First killing frost on the 28th, about four weeks behind the mean, which is Sept. 27, and yet the first touch of white frost (Sept. 3) was about two weeks before the average, which is Sept. 16; the cold, therefore, increased no more from Sept. 3 to Oct. 24—a period of fifty-one days—than in a medium season from Sept. 16 to 27, only eleven days.

The amount of rain was also very small, with the exception of a fall of two and a quarter inches on the 26th and 27th in twenty-four hours—the whole amount being only 2.31 inches, and with that, which was the greatest rain since the 8th of August, only a very little above the average—(2 5-6 inches)—the mean of the seventeen previous being 4.11 inches. Rain fell on sixteen days, viz.: the 1st, 4th, 10th and 11th, 13th, 18th, 17th, 18th, 21st, 24th, 25th and 27th.

On the 25th there was a slight trace of Snow on Round-Top, the highest peak of the Catskill Mountains, and two other peaks of little inferior elevation, but this was a strange occurrence about the 15th of October.

MERCER HALL, Nov. 3, 1862.

OUR CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

The Senate Election—The Inevitable Negro—The New-York Paroled Soldiers—Business Affairs.

CHICAGO, Monday, Nov. 3, 1862.

The excitement of the canvass, which closes with the election to-morrow, is greater than we had any reason to anticipate a few weeks ago. The Opposition, encouraged by the absence of so many Republicans from the State, fighting for the maintenance of the Government, have been making tremendous efforts, and have resorted to everything that demagogueism could devise to arouse prejudice and excitement. Emboldened by the impunity with which treason has heretofore been proclaimed at the North, they have denounced the Government as bitterly and unsparingly as ever did the Blue-light Federalists in the days of Madison.

The "inevitable negro" was made to do duty in a double capacity. The colorphobia of all the West is intense. You can have no idea of the strength and meanness of the prejudice against the unfortunate negro in two-thirds of this State. The vote on the new Constitution, last June, was significant upon this point. It so happened that about 2,000 contrabands were sent into this State, a short time ago, by Gen. GRANT; and, although eight-tenths of them were taken up as laborers in Egypt, the opposition Press and orators set up such a howl as would lead one to believe that all Africa was to be thrown upon us at once. Not content, as heretofore, with the political phase of the question, upon which they have harped for years, with all the assiduity of BUCCANA's dog at the squirrel-hole, they have been endeavoring to make laborers believe that the "Abolitionists"—as other squirrel-hole—were about to deluge the land with colored labor, so as to drive the white workmen out, or compel them to work for low wages, and this at a time when men are scarce, crops are perishing for the want of them, and the price of labor is a hundred per cent. higher than it was a year ago. But the hue and cry has not been without its effect.

But the main reliance of the Opposition is the absence of Republicans in the army. The vote of the Iowa soldiers shows at least five Republicans to one Democrat. The proportion from this State will not be quite as high. In your accounting for results, should they be adverse, you can safely put the proportion down as four to one. The patriotic Democrats will vote, to quite an extent, for the Union ticket. This will be the case especially in the northern part of the State. Should the Opposition succeed in electing their State ticket, it will be no indication of a change of sentiment in Illinois, nor an expression of the majority of her people. Give our soldiers an opportunity to vote, and we will elect the Union ticket by 25,000 majority.

The paroled men of the New-York regiments were greatly elated at the intelligence which was published, that they were to be permitted to return to their homes. But as day after day has passed, and nothing further has been heard from it, they are heartsick and disappointed.

Large numbers have deserted, and several have been arrested, and sentenced by Court-martial to fine and imprisonment. The following are the sentences of those belonging to the Eastern regiments:

Thomas O'Brien, 9th Vermont, violation 7th Article of War—to the State Penitentiary during the war, at hard labor, and to forfeit all pay.

John McKinney, 9th Vermont, and H. Sherwood, 125th New-York, violation Article 9—sixty days in the Penitentiary, and forfeit pay to the expiration of the sentence.

Peter Brady, 125th New-York, various offences—six months in Penitentiary.

Geo. A. Chase, 9th Vermont, and Henry Wheeler, 125th New-York—fifteen days in Penitentiary.

Edward Dougherty, Co. F, 5th New-York Artillery—six months in Penitentiary.

Charles Williams, 126th New-York—sixty days in City Bridewell, $25 fine.

John Eagan, 126th New-York, ninety days in Penitentiary.

G. W. Allinan, 126th New-York; C. H. Sheffer, 126th New-York; L. Toombs, 126th New-York; J. Hart, 126th New-York—sixty days in Bridewell, and $30 fine for desertion.

The officers and the Governmentare more to blame in this matter than the men themselves. Had they been treated as they ought to have been, they never would have deserted. Gov. MORGAN ought to interfere in their behalf, and endeavor to protect them from any further bad usage.

The Sixtieth Ohio is to be mustered out on Wednesday, I understand. They are twelve months men, and their time has nearly expired. The Thirty-second Ohio is under arrest for general insubordination. There are 3,797 Illinois troops in camp, embraced in three regiments and two batteries.

Major COWAN, of the One Hundred and Sixteenth New-York, is Provost-Marshal of the post.

The Thirty-second Wisconsin passed through this city on Friday for Cairo. They are fully armed and equipped, as all Wisconsin regiments have been, and are 980 strong, rank and file.

A suit of some importance was decided last week in the Sessions, in which the City was plaintiff. It was brought to recover from SYLVESTER LUTZ, and his sureties, as Treasurer of the Board of Public Works, the sum of $108,000. The matter was strongly contested; but the City obtained a verdict for the amount claimed, with $67,911 damages. There are also indictments against Mr. S. for embezzlement, but as the sum is so large it is not probable that they will ever be brought to trial. Justice out West is blind when heavy amounts are concerned, but is lynx-eyed upon a poor devil who hath stolen a loaf to keep him from starving.

H. R. GOODMAN, a merchant of this city, was murdered in the streets of La Salle on Tuesday night last. He arrived late, and was passing over from one railroad depot to another, when he was set upon and beaten to such an extent that he lived but a few hours. He had a considerable sum of money with him, which was taken by the murderer.

The Annual Commencement of the Garrett Biblical Institute—the Methodist theological seminary for the Northwest—closed on Wednesday evening. There were fourteen in the graduating class. This institution is founded upon a benefaction of $300,000, bestowed by the late Mrs. ELIZABETH GARRETT, of this city.

Full business is still very active, and continues to present features of remarkable prosperity.

The receipts of wheat at the Western Lake ports continue to show a heavy deficit. In this city it is about 45 per cent. For two years, the figures for September and October are:

	September.	October.
1861—bushels	2,967,412	2,665,559
1862—bushels	1,735,663	1,907,961
Deficit—bushels	1,231,749	757,598

There is also a serious falling off in the receipts at Milwaukee, although the percentage is not so heavy as with us. The figures are:

	September.	October.
1861—bushels	2,212,262	2,654,708
1862—bushels	1,722,442	2,356,525
Deficit—bushels	489,820	298,273

We must, however, take into the account the increased receipts of flour, which will lessen the deficit considerably. The receipts this year have been equal to 7,606,309 bushels, and in 1861, to 6,076,596,—or nearly a million bushels in favor of 1862.

Corn continues to come in heavily—28,625,549 bushels, against 24,274,268 last year. Oats and Rye show an increase of over 100 per cent—so that our aggregate grain receipts are now about 74,000,000 in excess of those of 1861.

The Lake business is closing up. The shipments, last week, however, were heavy, reaching to about 50,000 barrels of flour and 1,200,000 bushels of grain. The railroads have advanced their freight again from ten to fifteen cents per bbl. on flour. This heavy tariff operates heavily against the farmers of the West, and creates much dissatisfaction. If the roads would continue fair rates the year round, they would realize more from this business than they now do, by the gouging policy, as soon as navigation closes. The Western people do not like to have advantage taken of our necessities, to depreciate the price of our great staples by exorbitant charges for carriage.

EXAMINE YOUR POSTAGE STAMPS.—It is surprising what carelessness, or rather recklessness, everywhere prevails in the matter of postage stamps. They are freely received by most people, not only without examination, beyond, perhaps, a mere glance at the denomination; but when put up in small envelopes, some of 25 and 50 cents are received for the sum indorsed, without inspection or counting. The success of these petty swindles encourages young and old rascals to possess themselves of stamps before used upon letters, and the Government or correspondents, or both, must suffer when, honestly or dishonestly, these worthless stamps find their way upon letters the second time. If postage stamps must circulate as change, all classes are interested in refusing those which are mutilated or much soiled. And it is the duty of Postmasters to see that all which pass through their offices on letters, are badly soiled, beyond "redemption." On every account, we therefore advise the public to be on their guard, and examine stamps offered them with at least as much scrutiny as they exercise in taking bank notes. It would also curtail the facilities for this species of cheating, if business men and others would destroy, or otherwise put out of reach, their old letters and envelopes received by mail.—Holbrook's U. S. Mail.

THE PROGRAMME OF TREASON.

An Important Conversation—How the Union is to be Finally Shattered—The Part to be Played by the Democratic Party at the North—A Financial Crisis—A Prophecy.

Correspondence of the New-York Times:

FREDERICK CITY, Md., Tuesday, Oct. 28, 1862.

Conversing with a gentleman a few days ago, with whom a rebel officer informed a short time during the late invasion of Maryland, he related the following as the substance of a social conversation between himself and the officer, who appeared to be a very free-spoken and candid gentleman, and a man of no ordinary degree of intelligence; and taking a particular liking to his host, who, like himself, had been an uncompromising old-line Whig, he spoke freely of the political issues of the day. Upon my friend's asking him how he, being a disciple of the immortal CLAY, could take part in the destruction of this glorious Republic, which was the pride and boast of that illustrious statesman, he replied that he did not feel altogether at home in his present vocation, and often had serious doubts on the subject; he thought the Southern States should have made further efforts to right their grievances in the Union before going out of it, but that he found himself, like thousands of others, the creature of circumstances, although he had, in the beginning, opposed secession as both impolitic and suicidal to the best interests of both sections. The tremendous pressure brought to bear upon the public mind in the South, soon caused the irrevocable step to be taken, which made it too late for compromise, and as all his interests lay in that section, and his fellow-countrymen had cast themselves into the breach, he now thought it best to cast in his destiny with theirs, and, making common cause, press the issue to ultimate success, which he seemed to have but little doubt of being the result of their struggle—the principal aid upon which he relied as a means to that end, was a division of sentiment at the North; and the "Democratic Party" was to be used as the instrument to accomplish that very desirable object.

My friend here remarked that he thought these expectations ill-founded, as Northern Democrats had nobly responded to the call of the President for troops, and were largely represented in the field by both officers and men, who would never cease their efforts until the rebellion was unconditionally subdued, and the country reunited.

The officer replied: "Don't you deceive yourself in the signs of the times; our 'game is a deep one. We have counted the cost; we know what we can do. Our agents are now operating all over the North; they are mixed up in all the various ramifications of society, political, religious and social, and at the proper time the world will stand in astonishment at some of the boldest and most sublime master-strokes of policy the mind of man has ever conceived, or the cunning and perseverance of the human race ever executed. States and statesmen, Presidents and Cabinets will fall before it, like grain before the sickle. Our plans are well matured; it is next to impossible to fail. Every thing so far has resulted just as we arranged it should, and with a few slight exceptions and some little unforeseen accidents, we have succeeded fully equal to our most sanguine expectations. We planned the disarrangement of the currency to destroy Northern credit; and our agents, by simultaneously purchasing gold and silver at a premium, assisted by other speculators who unwittingly aided our schemes, came near upsetting the monetary affairs of the nation, which was only temporarily prevented by Northern capitalists, who feel that their all is at stake in this war, and who have succeeded in staving off the money crisis a little longer; but it will come in spite of all their efforts to prevent it. "And after the Northern elections, which we can not fail of carrying, and the maturity of other plans which will soon develop themselves, we shall have a network spread over the entire nation, so minute in its details, and so inextricable in its nature, that even the devil himself, with all his arts and subtlety, could not escape through its meshes! Northern Democracy will fall into our embrace as gently as a lover falls into the arms of his mistress! Many who are now acting with that party have no idea of the extent and purpose of the political campaign before them, and it is well they have not, or we should be deprived of many valuable coworkers, who are not yet prepared to adopt our views, and who are yet acting in good faith toward the Federal Government, but who will at the proper time (with some few exceptions) follow the victorious banner of 'Democracy' into the camp of the South, and openly espouse the cause they are now secretly, and many of them ignorantly, advancing. They will not stand alone in this matter; many who have hitherto stood far above the reach of suspicion, will find themselves gradually and imperceptibly entangled in the net we have woven for their especial chase; and who, after finding where they have unconsciously wandered, may make a spasmodic effort to extricate themselves, but finally yield, helpless victims to the inexorable destiny which awaits them.

"Why, my dear Sir, you may not believe me when I tell you, but some who have heretofore been the head and front—leaders of the Republican Party—will assist us not a little in 'playing our Democracy into the hands of our Confederacy,' and when all is ready, a dissolution of Congress and a mutiny in the National army, (caused by personal and political wranglings and jealousies, the seeds of which are already sown,) are obviously things of easy accomplishment!

"The Republican Party is also unconsciously playing into our hands; recklessness and stupidity characterize every act. They appear blind to their own fate, and careless as to the fate of their country. Intoxicated with their success at the last Presidential election—bewildered at the magnitude of the crisis, and the complicated condition of national affairs, and hopelessly divided into two helpless factions, the conservatives and the radicals, the latter of whom drive the 'machine,' they are incapable of offering successful resistance to the mighty influences which cluster around the charmed name of 'Democracy,' so, we see the power now seemingly in our hands, and by a little management upon our part, which we have set Democrats and Republicans by the ears quarreling over minor things and the spoils of office, we will easily secure the substance and leave them the empty shadow to appropriate between them.

"Mark my word for it, we will create a division in the North, we will kill off Republicanism with Democracy, and then swallow up 'Democracy' at our leisure! Both stand in the way of our purposes, and both must fall."

The Government and the Paper Contractors.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The paragraph in your paper of Oct. 31, on the subject of "Government Contracts for Paper," is correct in the main facts, and it would be but just that "relief" should be granted, in view of the onerous burden which the unprecedented rise in the market for paper stock imposes upon contractors. Yet it is not certain that all the contracts will not be complied with, should the "relief" not be granted.

FRED. C. JONES.

The War, the Proclamation, and the Slaves.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The inquiry, "What shall be done with the enfranchised slaves?" is one which involves consequences, varied in magnitude only by those of the rebellion itself. Time will show the emancipation subject to two distinct contingencies, if no auxiliary policy is adopted to carry it to a successful and speedy end. It will prove a dead letter, or if carried into effect, the blacks remaining intermixed with the whites, it will induce a war of extermination. The first would provoke the contempt of both the rebels and the civilized world; the second would cause an animosity on the part of the South, and an execration by mankind generally toward the North, that five generations would not see obliterated, and which would be placed in the category of the deeds of Cawnpore.

I have before intimated, through your columns, a policy involving the dispersion of the enfranchised blacks, to which the subsequent advent of the President's Proclamation of Emancipation furnishes ground for giving more definite and tangible shape. That the question is one fraught with difficulties well-nigh insurmountable, the absence of, or vagueness of projected schemes treating its solution, but too distinctly attests; and in realization of this, we simply propose a shaping of the evils before us—and among which, I believe, is emancipation. Any plan of immediate deportation, and colonization to weaken the productive power of the South, as a military expedient under the pressure and exigencies of the hour, is as ill-advised as for the contemporaries of Noah to have attempted a construction of the flood by evaporation! While the proposal to colonize Florida simply is like depending upon an half-inch stream to revolve a forty-foot wheel; at long intervals the buckets would fill, and the wheel would turn—but quite too slow for practical purposes. Just another scheme, which has found favor in some journals, is, "Let the blacks remain upon the soil, and persistently refuse to work without the whites hire them." The last involves two bonafides—one of which totally neutralizes all practical results growing out of emancipation as a military necessity to weaken the productive system of the South; while the latter ignores the highly important fact that his long masters will not, under duress, compensate the services which they have traditionally extorted. The argument hitherto addressed to the South in favor of emancipation was, compensation for salutary service of the black would stimulate him to exertion, which compulsion could not be made to equal. The plantocrats being correct, nothing would so effectually strengthen the arm of rebellion as for the South at once to abolish Slavery, and disperse from the large plantations the blacks over the white territory, and hire them at nominal wages to the four-fifths of non-slaveholders. The rebel Government would augment its power of successful warfare by itself paying the wages of the blacks; for—more effectually than now—it would release every white man of the South to fight.

No! as a military expedient, the enfranchised blacks must not be left intermingled with, and at the command of the whites of the South. Deportation offers no immediate relief; the colonization of Florida, only affords but a partial one, and the question recurs—Is there any practical and authentic mode of disposing of the difficulty? Not there is a way, eminently feasible, by which the rebels can be deprived of the productive labor of the blacks, and compelled to quit fighting and go to producing, and that too without the slightest necessity of the North being entrusted to secure the entire freedom of the blacks; and that way involves no interference forever of any future attempts of the South to reinstitute Slavery into the Territories; it leaves Europe no cause to complain of a restricted blockade; it leaves the South to produce with their own hands—as does the North—its means of subsistence—which, in time, owing to a homogeneity of institutions will lead to fraternity of feeling—it leaves it without the power of creating a Navy; it leaves rebellion within certain circumscribed boundaries to expend itself and finally become extinct; it gives the North the aid of the entire four millions of slaves to prosecute the war, (to fight only upon condition of their being invaded); it gives the North easy means of protecting the blacks; it places the blacks under obligation to the North for securing their liberty; it combines the blacks where they can have no possible motive in coming North to compete with the white laborer; it will admit of a reduction of the army one half; it secures the Mississippi river to the North; it will place the blacks where their future deportation—in part or in whole—will be the most convenient. This plan, is to place all the enfranchised blacks west of the Mississippi river; in the States of Arkansas, Louisiana (West) and Texas. They can be taken there in the following manner.

Let our army invade the slave States east of the Mississippi, (as it did last spring,) and take possession of the principal lines of Railroads and navigable rivers; let it send out the blacks as scouts, to bring in to certain stations, all of the colored race whom it is possible to reach, and as fast as they come in, let them be sent across the Mississippi; let any of the above three States, at the same time, let both army and navy assist Southern Unionists in escaping from any of the Slave States east of the Mississippi, and place them either in Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana (West,) or Texas. Let all rebels be driven from the Slave States east of the Mississippi into those west of it, there to shift for themselves. Let their lands be confiscated and given to Southern Union refugees. This would convert Missouri into a State as loyal as Iowa. It would place a sufficient loyal white population in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas, to employ the blacks at cotton and sugar raising, and to represent those States in Congress. The moment the blacks cross the Mississippi they should be armed and disciplined, and told that if the rebels attempt to invade them, they are to fight as freemen for their homes and liberties. The blacks thus situated, thoroughly armed and disciplined, with the aid of the whites in those States, with the river from Cairo to the Gulf in possession of our gunboats, would not need a man from any of the Northern States to maintain the possession to us of the entire territory all the Gulf ports of the South to reopened to traffic in all articles not contraband of war.

This plan, it will be seen, circumscribes the rebellion to a line defensible—except from Washington to the Ohio River—by our gunboats, and the remaining link to complete the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Thus restricted, without the resources and of the blacks, the rebellion would no longer be formidable. We could side our time for its ultimate disruption. Should foreign nations recognize the independence of the South, we heed not. By slow degrees, commencing on its circumference, would the regenerating influences of freedom be made to permeate and leaven the whole disjointed mass.

Unless this time of policy is adopted, the North has but one other course left to pursue: to exterminate the South, which will cost as many lives to do as we destroy; or, let the South go. It is urged that my plan is too large, in reaching the desired end? I ask, which would you, a loyal South-Carolinian, plan of circumscribing the rebellion, within a natural defensive boundary, and leaving it to exhaust its virulence; or, annihilate and then repeople the country? If the odds is supposed to be in favor of the latter, I ask if, in a moral view, there is not something in favor of the former?

Does Brooklyn-type Democracy expect to win back the South by its traditional course of succumbing to all of its exactions? If, in the absence of Union Democrats and Republicans, it should be the misfortune of the country to see the experiment tried, the result will annihilate the last vestige of fraternity on part of the patriot Democracy toward their quondam compatriots; for, let this party consider that any concessions which it may offer, the South will reject, knowing as it does, that were the way to secure from such concessions, the moment the friends of the Union returned from the war to the ballot-box, the issues which are now the cause of the contest would be revived; and after 5,000 trying in hand at the ostrich game, and experimenting a cheap entire goodness, it is not among the things impossible that this generous craving fraternity might have an inkling that it was among the decrees of heaven, that even on goodness a brotherhood was predestinated to fulfill the sobering in upon earth of the full state of millennial beatitude.

The war will continue as long as the South can make successful resistance to the National Government. Destroy Slavery in the way I have indicated, and the military power of the South would be reduced one-half, while our ranks would be thinned by the same, to the extent that the blacks would prove available as a military auxiliary.

Should the South succeed in crushing the rebellion within lines defensible (except some two hundred miles) by our iron-clad gunboats (our most potent means of warfare), and it will be practically dead in five years. The project of colonizing Texas, simply—leaving Louisiana open to the control of the enemy—is untenable, there being no natural defence between Louisiana and Texas. Arkansas, being a cotton-producing State, should be made an asylum for the blacks, both from agricultural and strategic reasons, as much for Arkansas and Texas.

Should the South achieve its independence, territorial aggrandisement would be its most cherished and distinctive policy. It would invade Mexico, and Central America, leaving its track in ashes of Slavery. We can possess the means of destroying Slavery, and bring the blacks in heading off future Slavery extension. Surely the child must be coming that cannot see what we both can and ought to do, before it is too late. I therefore appeal to those in power—the President, Governors, and members of Congress—to give immediate and earnest heed to the plan herein portrayed as a solution of our present difficulties.

FROM KENTUCKY.

All Shades of the Invasion and Treacherous Neutrality to Select South—Rosecrans and Buell Consulting—Confidence in Buell Shaken—Questionable Order of Col. McMeary—Rebel Numbers Appropriated by Both—Disloyal and Deserters—Soldiers' Families—Complaints of Kentucky Farmers, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Thursday, Oct. 30, 1862.

BOYLE is authorized to send without delay to Vicksburgh, as prisoners of war, and there parole and have subject for exchange, all recruits for the rebel army, captured or arrested by the Army of the Ohio; also, to immediately arrest and send to Vicksburgh, and detail to return to Kentucky, all persons who have actively aided, as alleged in the invasion of Kentucky by rebel troops. Loyalists demand that disloyalists, and treacherous neutrals, who profess to "take no part on either side of this unhappy controversy," be dispatched to where they belong, and not enjoy any longer the protection of a Government against whose integrity and existence they do all they can or dare.

Maj. BRIDGES again orders all officers in the city to immediately join their commands, or they will be arrested and confined in the military prison. All passes issued to officers, having certificates of disability, are revoked.

The army of the Ohio is reported at Bowling Green. Rosecrans and BUELL are conferring at the Galt House. Buell's planning may be excellent, but Rosecrans is the man for executing. Rosecrans, with BUELL's means and opportunities, would have destroyed the enemy's army at Perryville. BUELL's movements were controlled too much by "fortuitous circumstances" to be entirely and decisively successful. Our confidence in Gen. BUELL has been greatly shaken.

Col. McMEEKIN, of the Seventeenth Kentucky, near Newmarket, orders all fugitive slaves to leave his regiment within two weeks from the 27th. "Any fugitive slave within the limits of the regiment will be delivered to his owner or agent appointed, upon application, whether the owner be loyal or a rebel." The question is raised, whether this order is authorized, legitimate, in contradiction to the laws of the land.

The Blind Asylum, Masonic Hall, other public buildings, and the mansions of resident rebels, are being taken for hospital and other military uses. Two thousand two hundred wounded and sick soldiers arrived yesterday. About 6,500 are now in the hospitals, besides 1,000 on transports there to be sent to their regiments. About 100 disabled soldiers were discharged since the 20th.

Since Jan. 1, ninety-seven desertions took place from Col. MAHAN's Twenty-sixth Kentucky. Bands, while retreating, lost hundreds by desertions. The families of Col. HAGGNER's Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, as yet without bounty or pay, and the families of other unpaid Kentucky Regiments, are suffering for daily bread. Some of our farming friends about Munfordville, Bardstown and elsewhere, complain that BUELL's army, without commendation or vouchers, have stripped them of everything left by the invaders. Many of our soldiers are still unequipped and inadequately armed. In some points of discipline, and some other matters, we might wisely imitate our enemies.

Of about 1,800 prisoners brought here since the 10th, 400 left on the 29th for Vicksburgh.

GEN. FREMONT IN ST. LOUIS.

Presentation of a Sword to the General—A Speech.

A grand "Fremont festival" came off in St. Louis, on Saturday evening last. The occasion of it was the presentation of a sword to the Major-General by the people of St. Louis. Delegations from the towns in the vicinity of St. Louis, and from all the city wards, joined in the demonstration. As early as 6 o'clock the people began to gather in Market-street, and an immense crowd was gathered at the time fixed for the presentation. Thirty thousand people, the Democrat says, had collected in Chouteau-avenue, and cheered themselves hoarse for Gen. FREMONT. Finally he appeared on the balcony of the Brant House, amidst the greatest enthusiasm, and the burning of Bengal fires. Mr. EMIL PREROUSE presented the sword to Gen. FREMONT, with the following brief address:

As a matter of daily occurrence, a sword presentation has in itself little significance. For, care, however, we claim significance. We claim it for the reasons prompting our actions, which amount to a verdict of the people against selfish politicians and a deluded Administration. We further claim it on account of the sphere whence it emanates, it being a testimonial from 12,000 Western men of foreign birth, who feel proud to honor the man who has honored the American name at home and abroad. And because this is the man, it is that we, above all reasons, do claim significance for our act.

General: Our sword is given to that noble Pathfinder, who by his immortal proclamation first dared to strike at the heart of the rebellion; to the man whose principles are identical with those of liberty; to forced in stand aside; the true patriot, who has suffered all undeserved hate with rare self-denial, thus setting an example deeply shaming his assailers. General, your country has been the most elegant appreciation, engaged as a great heart of the people, whose gratitude has always been, is, and will be forever, Fremont and victory!

Here Mr. PREROUSE handed the sword to Gen. FREMONT, who replied as follows:

REPLY OF GEN. FREMONT.

This, my friends, is a magnificent setting in which you place the noble gift that, in the name of the German population of St. Louis I have just received from their Committee. I am happy that circumstances have conducted me to receive it directly from yourselves, and that I have this opportunity in the sound of your voices and the light of your torches, and in the kindling enthusiasm of the moment, to tell you how deeply I am indebted to you, and how cordially I reciprocate your friendship. Believe me, my German friends, that I fully appreciate the distinction this friendship gives me. Habituated for generations to liberty and domestic tranquillity, our American people enjoyed them like sunshine and air, as the natural inheritance of their race. Their homes have been always sanctuaries, their persons inviolable as Roman Senators, every avenue to individual prosperity was open to them, and when the crash of civil war came they heard in it only the call to arms for a transient struggle. But your surroundings have been of a different character, and when the guns at Sumter broke the peace of the Continent, they woke for other echoes in your hearts. You had lived where political and social liberty existed only in men's aspirations. You remembered how often you had seen the sword of the people rudely bared against the tyrannies of established power, and you knew better how to appreciate a birthright of liberty, and saw quicker the presence of its dangers. Therefore it is—and because you are farther removed from the intrigues which in this country make the public service dangerous—that your approbation has in it a peculiar value. And this is it that makes the beautiful gift I receive from you to-night, and the splendid exhibition of regard with which you surround its presentation, one of the most solid satisfactions of my life.

And, indeed, I am truly happy that you have placed me among that brotherhood of patriots to whose hands you are willing to confide the sword in your cause. For no matter how begun, this is the People's war. Whatever issue bared the sword, it is now a reformation, and you carried not only for the integrity of the country, but for its regeneration, which is in your hands to accomplish.

In every country its leading features mark out the site where great battles must be fought. Upon the Old Continent recurring battles on the same spots, and age after age, have witnessed the struggle of nations, always more or less for liberty, working out always the problem of Government—whether the people should hold the sword or be themselves subject to it.

At last we have received the baptism of blood which admits us among the old nations. Upon our hitherto peaceful country these last impressions have been made, that complete its resemblance to the old continent, and now this problem of government comes to us, and is already marking out its historic fields. But this time it finds the sword in the hands of the people—this time they are masters of the situation. They let it from their vantage ground and by the light of age, and they will to wield the sword that this first shall be their last and only contest in this question of government, and that these historic battle-fields of ours shall be, not be recurring arenas for the fruitless shedding of fraternal blood, but great goals upon the final triumph of popular liberty.

But while you give the wealth and power of the nation to maintain the integrity of its territory, and while you stand by your constituted authorities with invincible fidelity, and hold them inflexibly in position, you must with equal determination maintain those safeguards which have been thrown around your personal liberties. The strength of the nation to rise superior to every assault lies in the maintenance of individual liberty as it stood under the supremacy of the laws—in the freedom of speech and freedom of the Press. Every invasion of the laws is a usurpation; dangerous in revolution, and not to be justified by any plea of temporary expediency. Little principle—stop the beginnings, and stop them decisively, remembering that if you fail in this duty you surrender the sword and the people fail.

God placed in the hands of an angel, at the gates of Eden, a flaming sword, turning on every side, to guard the way to the tree of life. So has he placed in your hands a sword which you must keep always bare and flaming, and turning every way, to guard the approaches to that liberty, which is the tree of your national life.

And now, my dear and kind friends, in parting from you and leaving our connection to these pleasant associations, the memory of which we have rekindled to-night, what can I say that will ever remotely express the deep impressions your generous favor has made upon me? I shall hold you always in most cordial and affectionate remembrance, and I can only say that gratitude and regard for you will remain among the permanent emotions of my heart.

The laws of Rome denied triumphs to Generals for victories obtained in civil wars—and rightly too, for how can we find in the bloodshed and misfortunes of countrymen, occasions for rejoicing? But this—if it be not presumptuous in me to say so—this is a triumph which no feelings and no laws forbid, and which every law would be powerless to express,—a triumph in the affections of the people.

The General then withdrew to the parlor of the Brant House, where he was received by a delegation of young ladies who presented him with a sash. Miss JOZEMYNE WEBERS made the presentation speech and Gen. FREMONT responded:

It gives me, ladies, much pleasure that you have been willing to add this beautiful expression of your regard to the gift I have just received.

In old times, before a knight was invested with sword and spurs, it was customary that he should undergo a period of abstinence and penance. I have gone through my period of mortification, and I am happy that at the end of it, my sword is now to be girt on by such fair and friendly hands.

There is an old story, probably more familiar to yourselves than to me, of a ring, which touched sharply the finger of its wearer when evil thoughts arose in his mind, or whenever he felt tempted to commit a wrong. Coming as it does from such a pure and generous source, the touch of your gift to my hand, will be to me an impulse to generous thoughts and right acts.

I use this occasion to offer to you, my countrywomen, the tribute of my admiration for your patriotic devotion to the country, and at the same time to express, in the name of good soldiers to whom I have commanded, their thanks and mine for the kindness which has saved so many lives and soothed so many hours of rugged pain. I trust that your self-sacrificing devotion will have an early reward. I hope that, for your sakes, peace will soon return, so that the husbands, brothers and sons whom you have sent to the field may again gladden your homes.

Casper Butz, Chas. Johnson, Col. Jameson, Col. Garnett and Mr. Bonner, made addresses outside of the hall, strongly tinctured with radicalism, and the ceremonies closed with a serenade to the General by WALDAUER's band.

Gen. Banks in Boston.

A SPEECH TO THE PEOPLE.

Major-Gen. N. P. BANKS arrived in Boston on Saturday night, and had a cordial reception. In reply to a deputation of welcome he made a brief speech, which is thus sketched in the Journal:

"Gen. BANKS made his acknowledgments to the company for the earnest and so kind unexpected welcome which they had accorded to him, and in the gentleman who introduced him—Mr. WARNER—for the complimentary allusions whether had been made to his recent career. It was good, he said, for a son of Massachusetts, after a long and anxious absence, to breathe again the free air of the old Commonwealth, to look upon the faces of the friends of his youth, on those marked with years and fresh with honors. It would be an icy hearted man that could turn his steps homeward after a long sojourn in other lands without emotion. However, glad his old friends might be to see him—and the presence of such a crowd at such an hour was sufficient attestation of the sincerity of their welcome—he was more glad to see them. Such a welcome could not but excite deep emotion. He knew not in what terms to thank them for their kindness.

In the discharge of his duties, he had been guided by principles which he knew would be approved by the people of his native State, and he dared say, as he believed, that in every instance his action would be found, upon the closest scrutiny, to be in accordance with the precepts and examples which the career of so many of her time-honored and illustrious sons afforded.

Men separated from the busy crowds of men engaged in the peaceful vocations of life, find it difficult, oftentimes, to maintain a perfect connection in thought and act with those from whom they have parted. Distrust and doubt often accompany actions that merit commendation. It is therefore doubly sweet to have such distrust and doubt removed by a spontaneous welcome from so many willing hearts. These voices cheered him within and without. He was proud to accept their welcome, not as for himself alone, but in part, as the representative of the many noble men that have so suddenly been called to the field of blood. In their name—in the name of thousands of our heroic sons—he thanked them. He had served, during the year and a half of absence, with many gallant men of the West, of the Middle States, and of the East; and he felt that he could say, with the concurrence of all, that the sons of Massachusetts were alike worthy of their sires, and the cause they defended.

The period of war is never one of continued success or perpetual disaster; alternate triumphs and defeats diversify the history of every warlike nation. We had our disasters as other nations in like circumstances, and despondency rested momentarily upon many loyal faces. He saw nothing in the future to justify apprehension, or to strengthen for a moment a fear that our earnest efforts for the perpetuity of the Government of the Constitution and the Union would fail. The material and physical strength of the nation has not yet been appreciated, much less exhausted. Not a loyal State, except perhaps Maryland, exhibits, or has exhibited, the slightest evidence that the Government was engaged in a serious war. Whenever their power shall be completely developed, the rebellion will be suppressed. It can never resist successfully an earnest and exhausting demonstration of the marvelous power of the loyal States. The overreaching Winter was not to be [illegible]

[illegible] fear to traction. The Government was determined to pull forth its strength. Numerous expeditions were in fact that could not, if apparently pressed, but be felt throughout the United States. He hoped to bear his share in the hardships and perils of these labors, and he asked an other salutation and support in the coming trials, as in these past, but as he approached and sustained by such gallant spirits as Massachusetts had sent forth to battle for the great and imperishable principles of humanity and liberty.

—On Potter-street, Hartford, says the Times of that city, resides Mrs. Michael O'Neil, a fair-haired, rosy woman, of about 32, who has been married just thirteen years, and has had just thirteen children. Eight of them are living, and are fine healthy children. Once there were triplets born to her, four times she had twins, and twice she became the mother of single children. Thus are expectations of a further and speedy increase of the family. Mr. O'Neil is a laboring man, about 40 years old, and a very worthy man. Is there another case to equal this?

Base Ball Match.

NEW-YORK TIMES CORRESPONDENTS VS. SUNDAY TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

The return game between these "amateur" nines was played on Monday at the grounds of the Union Club, Morrisania, and resulted in a victory for the Sunday Times. Each party having won a game, the conquering nine will be played next Monday. Notwithstanding the cold, high wind, some very good play was shown on both sides, among which were a number of fly catches, four of them, one man on each side being run out before getting back to his base. BAXTER, of the Sunday Times, retired from his position as pitcher in the third innings of his antagonists, but resumed it in the remaining innings; and DEWALSDEN took hold of the pitching in the fourth inning of his antagonists—and subsequently—with considerable effect; the short stopping out the third man on the fly in good style, but making two bad misses of fly catches, after two men had gone out. The game in the 8th inning—the last—had 7 tallies made before the third man was put out. The pitcher entirely altered the complexion of the game. Dexterous catches caused confusion on the leg early in the game, which somewhat marred his excellent play as catcher for the "Dailies."

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

SAILING OF THE FRENCH WAR STEAMER MASSENA.—This line-of-battle ship steamed from her anchorage at the Southwest Spit this morning, and proceeded to sea. She arrived here on the 16th October, and her draft at that time was 27 feet. She has since taken in stores and fuel, and when she passed down the Ship Channel, was drawing 29 feet 8 inches—the greatest draft ever yet carried out of this harbor by way of Sandy Hook. She was piloted to sea in perfect safety by Mr. GEORGE EVANS, of pilot-boat Fanny, No. 17.

A SERIOUS CASE OF MAYHEM.—WM. MCSPEDDON, brother of Ex-Alderman MCSPEDDON, became involved in a fight at Military Hall, on Tuesday night, with FRANKLIN GEZOGRY, during which McSpeddon's nose was bitten off by his opponent, thereby disfiguring him for life. The nose was severed close to the face, and afterward thrown into the street by GEZOGRY. The two were Democrats of the same school, and nothing but the effection rum could have produced so disgraceful and criminal an act. The offender was arrested, and yesterday committed in default of bail, for trial, in the Court of General Sessions.

AID FOR THE MONITORS.—The Monitor Association will hold a meeting in aid of the Monitor Company, Fifty-second Regiment, this (Thursday) evening, Nov. 6, at 8 o'clock, in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Hon. HENRY B. STANTON and EDMOND DEDGE, Esq., and other eminent speakers will address the meeting.

GRAND CONCERT TO-NIGHT.—To-night, in the Twenty-third-street Church, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, there will be a Grand Concert, at which Prof. Berge, Wm. A. King and Jamieson, Mrs. Jamieson, Miss Mary E. Hawley and others will, in their various rôles, perform. The concert programme is an unusually attractive one, and the affair promises to be, as it deserves, a great success.

A PICKPOCKET AT TAMMANY HALL.—WILLIAM WHITE and JOHN PERSCOTT were taken into custody, on election night, for picking the pocket of JOHN MERRY, of No. 7 Broadway, of a pocket-book containing $400 in Treasury notes, at Tammany Hall. The accused were taken before Justice CONNOLLY, yesterday, and committed to the Tombs for trial. The most of the money was recovered.

Fifth Avenue Pavement—Can Property Owners be Taxed for Re-pavement.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Leonard.

William C. Rhinelander et. al. vs. The Mayor &c. of New-York.—The City Corporation in 1824 adopted an ordinance declaring that whenever the owners of lots fronting on the street should pave the sidewalks, the Common Council should, upon the expenses of paving, for a distance not less than one block, under the orders of the Common Council, and the work should be approved, each part of the street should forever thereafter be repaved and kept in repair at the expense of the Corporation. The owners of certain lots fronting on Fifth-avenue, allege in this complaint, that this avenue was subsequently opened, paved, &c., and the expenses paid in the manner prescribed by this ordinance; that the Common Council, in disregard of the obligation of the ordinance, repaved the avenue with the Belgian pavement, and assessed one-half of the cost thereof, in 1860, on the owners of lots fronting on the carriage-way so repaired, amounting to over $68,000, from which assessment they now demand to be relieved.

Justice LEONARD, in an opinion written by him in the case, says there can be no doubt that the act of 1813, (c. 175,) authorized the improvement. The statutes authorize the Common Council to impose the expenses for the improvements mentioned in these sections by assessment upon the owners of property benefited. It became the duty of the Common Council, by virtue of the authority, to raise the expenses incurred for the purposes contemplated, by the sections referred to, in the manner authorized by that act. Assuming that the Corporation had the authority to direct the laying of the Belgian pavement, directed by the act of 1832, aside from the question of consideration, the Common Council could not in 1824 abrogate the duty which the law imposed, to cause the expenses of it upon the lots benefited thereby. We must also hold that it was the time upon the land which the assessment created in 1833 and 1845, that induced the payment thereof, and not the ordinance of 1824. When the law authorizes the expense of such an improvement to be assessed in a particular manner, it is an undue assumption of power to impose the expense and attempt its collection from tax-payers at large; and I must doubt the obligation or validity of any ordinance or contract that has for its object the release of that source of payment which alone is authorized by the law that permits the improvement.

Judgment upon the demurrer for the defendants with costs.

Edwards Pierrepont for plaintiffs; Henry H. Anderson for the Corporation.

Action for Negligence in Placing Iron Castings against Street Wall—Complaint Dismissed.

Isaac Reig vs. William Boardman et al.—The plaintiff sues the defendants as the owners of a block or piece of iron, which he claims was so negligently placed against the wall of their foundry, at the foot of Eighth-street, on the public street, that it fell upon the plaintiff's son Jacob, and he became so injured that plaintiff suffered damage from loss of services, medical attendance, &c., to the amount of $1,000. The accident occurred on Saturday, the 22th of May, 1861, while the boy, with others, as defendants' witnesses, was playing about the premises.

The counsel for defendants moved to dismiss the complaint on the grounds, first, that no negligence had been shown on the part of defendants; and, second, that the defendants had not been shown to be the owners of the iron casting.

The motion being denied, the defendants put in a large amount of evidence, tending to show that the boy Jacob was guilty of gross negligence, and that the accident occurred by reason of the boy's climbing up and leaping from the casting. The defendants also put in evidence that the defendants were not properties of the foundry in May, '61. The complaint was therefore dismissed.

John A. Godfrey for plaintiff; John Anderson, Jr., for defendants.

Habeas Corpus Case—Recruit Discharged on the Ground of Physical Incapacity.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Barnard.

Jacob James Hoey vs. Col. Loomis.—In this proceeding, a writ of habeas corpus was issued on Monday last, commanding Col. LOOMIS to produce JAMES HOEY in Court yesterday morning, and show cause why he should not be discharged. It is alleged in the petition of the father that the boy had enlisted without his consent, and that he was not yet sixteen years of age, and that since then he had a severe attack of paralysis, from the effects of which his mental condition has become greatly impaired, and he is therefore incapable of doing military duty. The boy was produced, in obedience to the writ, and it appeared that he had enlisted in the Fourth Senatorial District Regiment, and deserted therefrom, and then was arrested and sent to Governor's Island. A number of witnesses were in attendance on the part of the prisoner. After hearing counsel, the Court made an order discharging the recruit immediately. Alex. H. Reavey for the petitioner.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 5—P. M.

The Stock market, without showing much activity, has ruled quite steady to-day, the political events of yesterday appearing to have little if any affect upon it. Governments, with only a moderate movement, were a shade lower, selling at 104¼@104½ at the First Board for the sixes of 1881, and without sales at the Second. State securities were quiet and without change. Railroad bonds showed their accustomed firmness and were in good demand. In Bank Stocks there was nothing of moment done. Pacific Mail was strong and ½ ⅌ cent. higher. Nicaragua Transit, which fell to ¼ yesterday, rallied to ¾. The Coal Stocks were firm. Sales of Delaware and Hudson at 112, and Delaware, Lackawana and Western at 115. For Pennsylvania Coal 100 was bid and 109½ asked.

The Railroad list ruled rather steady at the First Board, but gave way some toward the close. Erie, old Stock, showed the most activity, the sales running up between four and five thousand shares at 64@64½, ruling between the sessions at 64¼@64½, and at the Second Board at 64¼@64¾. The Preferred Stock, with a less active movement, was without change at the morning session, and sold in the afternoon at 31½, buyer thirty, against the same price, regular, at the First Board. New-York Central was somewhat heavy, selling down to 104¾ at both the First and Second Boards. Hudson River closed dull at 71¾@¾ decline. Harlem was without change of importance.

In the Western list, Cleveland and Pittsburgh was the most active and the strongest, selling largely at 80, the highest price of yesterday. Toledo fell to 70, ¾ decline. Illinois Central was steady at last evening's price. Michigan Central was ¼ lower. Southern old was sold as high as 42¾, ¾ advance, but receded to 42½. The Guaranteed was ¾ lower. Galena was ¾ and Rock Island ¾ lower. Burlington and Quincy fell to 82. A small lot of Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati was sold at 136, ¼ advance.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Ashby's Gap, we learn by our dispatches from the Army of the Potomac, was taken quiet possession of by our forces on Monday evening—the rebels retreating, and leaving us in undisturbed possession of the mountains, from which a good view of the Shenandoah Valley and Winchester could be obtained. No large body of the enemy was discovered. Piedmont was occupied by the cavalry and artillery under PLEASANTON and AVERILL on Monday night, and on Tuesday morning they pushed on, and after a spirited skirmish, occupied Marquette, and obtained command of the approaches to Manassas and Chester Gap, on the left of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Our dispatches from Washington this morning will be found of the highest importance. It is intimated that dispatches of grave import have been handed to the Government by the French Minister, and foreign complications are broadly hinted at. Important changes in the Cabinet and in military commands are also mentioned as sure to occur during the present week.

In the extreme front, toward Gordonsville, that portion of Gen. SIGKLES' command sent forward to look after the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, report having found it in much better order than expected. The bridge at Broad Run is so little injured that it can be repaired in a few hours, and Ketch Run bridge is entirely uninjured. Our troops yesterday held the country in the vicinity of Brentsville, and had driven the rebel patrols upon Warrenton Junction. The total rebel force there is believed to be not more than 3,000 infantry, with corresponding numbers of cavalry and artillery.

In regard to the situation in Virginia, the Washington Chronicle, of yesterday, says: "Indications convince us that a battle is imminent. The secret foes of the Republic, here and at Baltimore, have lately become nervous as to the issue, which is probably a good harbinger of victory. They may rest assured that a sufficient army is held in reserve not alone to defend the Capital, but to protect Maryland and Pennsylvania from another invasion. As we press back their front, we take care to secure our rear."

Late Richmond papers, received by flag of truce at Fortress Monroe, contain various matters of interest which we transfer to our columns. The Dispatch, of the 1st inst., insists that LEE had not evacuated Winchester, as reported, but still held that place, with his cavalry pickets beyond Bunker's Hill and east of Charlestown. Mobile, Charleston, and probably Savannah, the rebels think, are soon to be attacked by the land and naval forces of the National Government, and it is thought better that they should be burned rather than fall into our hands. The yellow fever appears to be still raging at Wilmington with considerable violence, especially among the negroes. Another rebel pirate is announced as ready to sail from one of the Southern ports, the second officer of which is CHARLES CARROLL HIGGS.

In our correspondence from Port Royal will be found the particulars of the illness and death of Gen. MITCHEL, announced yesterday morning. The doctors, it seems, are not decided as to the character of the fever which caused his death, but there is little doubt that it was yellow fever, probably brought to Port Royal in some of the vessels from Key West. The disease has been particularly fatal at Gen. MITCHEL's headquarters, some three or four prominent officers having been stricken down by it, including the General's two sons, members of his Staff. At last accounts, however, they were likely to recover. Gen. BRANNAN succeeded Gen. MITCHEL in the command, and issued a feeling order in relation to his death.

The rebel Gen. PRICE is reported at Gen. GRANT's headquarters to have moved south from Holly Springs, either with a view of attacking Corinth single handed, or forming a junction at Huntsville or Tuscumbia with BRAGG, thence to make a combined attack on Corinth. The defenses of Corinth are being strengthened on an extended scale. Over one hundred buildings in the line of the fortifications, now completed, have been appropriated and torn down. The seminary building is now used as a hospital, but will probably be destroyed, since it is in the range of our guns. The Tishemingo House, a very large building, situated in the center of the town, just beside the railroad track, is to be converted into a hospital, for which it is well adapted.

It was reported on Monday at Louisville, that BRAGG's army was at Murfreesboro, Tenn., and that 1,500 rebel cavalry were at Somerset, Ky.

Gen. LEW. WALLACE received his orders by mail, at Louisville, to report to Gen. GRANT at Corinth, and will be given an important command in the Department of the Tennessee.

The Richmond Dispatch, of the 1st inst., says that four prisoners were received at Libby Prison, on the day previous. They gave their names as James G. Baston, Wm. Williams, Joseph H. Pate and Jacob Rafin. They were captured at the mouth of the Rappahannock. BARNES was the master of the ship Alleghanian, WILLIAMS first mate and PATE pilot. This seems to set at rest the question of the manner in which the Alleghanian was destroyed.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, says that there are rumors in Washington that there will be a change in the Cabinet. Judge HUNTINGTON, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court for Indiana, having died lately, there is a vacancy in that Circuit. It is believed to have been offered to Secretary SMITH, of the Interior Department. Judge OTTO, of Indiana, and Assistant Secretary of the Interior, UHLER, are spoken of to fill the place in the Cabinet, if Secretary SMITH accepts.

GENERAL NEWS.

There appears to be no reason to doubt that HORATIO SEYMOUR is elected Governor of the State by a majority of about 5,000 votes. His friends claim a larger majority, but we cannot find it in the returns. The Congressional delegation will stand—Democrats, 17; Republicans, 15; Independent, 1. The complexion of the Legislature is not changed, though the Republican majority in the Assembly is considerably reduced.

Gov. ANDREW's majority in the State of Massachusetts is about 20,000. To the Senate, 34 Republicans are elected and 6 People's Union men. To the House, 179 Republicans and 34 People's Union men are elected.

The New-Jersey election has terminated in the success of FRAZER, the Democratic candidate for Governor, by about 10,000 majority—a Democratic gain of about 12,000 over the last vote for Governor. Of the Congressmen, four Democrats and one Republican are elected, and both branches of the Legislature will be largely Democratic—thus securing the election of a Democratic United States Senator.

The returns from Illinois indicate the election of five, and, perhaps, seven Republicans, and seven Democrats, to Congress. Two Districts are reported as doubtful.

The steamship Austrasian, which left this port on Wednesday for Liverpool, will call off Cape Race, weather permitting, on Saturday night or Sunday morning. Dispatches for Europe can be transmitted until Saturday noon, through the agency of Geo. SYDNEY, Esq., No. 145 Broadway, New-York.

The Stock Market was comparatively steady yesterday; no apparent effects either way being produced by the result of the election. Gold was ¼ per cent. lower.

Breadstuffs were depressed and cheaper, yesterday. Cotton was in fair demand, at higher prices. Sugars and Coffee were in good request, as were also Hay, Hops, Hides, Leather, Fish and Tallow. Provisions were lightly dealt in. The auction sales of Millinery Goods, Ribbons and Carpetings, passed off quite satisfactorily, the attendance having been good, and the bidding spirited. The Freight market exhibited more activity and firmness, with 407 vessels of all classes in port.

The Lesson of the Day.

It is agreed on all hands that dissatisfaction with the conduct of the war has been one of the main causes of the heavy popular verdicts against the Administration. Had the canvass turned solely on that point, the votes would substantially have all gone the same way. Those who gave their ballots on the side of the Administration did so in spite of, not by reason of, its management of the war, and because they considered that the election involved other issues yet more vital. They believed, and still believe, that the motive of the leaders of the Opposition was not the invigoration of the war, but its discontinuance. And yet they cannot doubt that the great body of the Opposition were actuated by an honest desire that the war should be effectively pushed on, and that they meant that their votes should weigh "to that extent—no more."

If the results of this triumph of the Opposition shall indeed be confined to that, no good patriot will grieve over it. At all events it is the duty of the Administration to be admonished by it, to that degree at least, and to see well to it that henceforth, come what may, the conduct of the war shall be as energetic as hitherto it has been languid.

Undeniably the President has been in a cruel dilemma. If he interfered, by any decided step, to urge forward a military movement against the disposition of the Generals, he was sure to excite an outcry, both in the army and among the people, for unprofessional intermeddling; and yet for all the inaction of the same Generals he, and he alone, was held accountable. It was at one time considered demonstrated that Gen. MCCLELLAN was over-cautious and unnecessarily slow; and an attempt was made to supersede him by Gen. POPE, who previously had acquired distinction for promptness and activity. Yet we all know what opposition that change excited both in the army and out of it, and how the President, in the end, was absolutely forced to beg Gen. MCCLELLAN to resume his command. So, too, of Gen. BUELL, in the chief Western Department. The President, out of all patience with the failure of that commander to overtake BRAGG, when invading Kentucky, removed him from his command; but the telegraphic remonstrances against it came so thick and strong from both army officers and leading citizens in Kentucky, that he was obliged in six hours to reinstate him—the consequence of which was that BRAGG escaped from Kentucky with as perfect impunity as he entered it, and the Administration has to bear the odium.

With such experiences, it is not singular that the President should latterly have been so much disposed to leave the Generals to their own inspirations. It is understood that he explicitly promised Gen. MCCLELLAN, on his resumption of command four months ago, to make him absolute master of his own movements; and yet it is the almost unbroken military inaction of that period which has contributed more than anything else to the popular demonstration against the President which we have just witnessed. Only two battles have been fought in the department, and both, for all aggressive purposes, were nearly fruitless. Now, without passing any opinion as to where the real blame lies, it is yet evident that the people hold the Administration responsible for it. The President has no alternative but to accept that responsibility, and henceforth to shape his conduct accordingly. With his whole mind and soul he must hereafter take care that the war shall be pushed on with the utmost energy.

What should be his relations, then, to the Generals in the field? The same precisely as to civil functionaries. It is his business to see that all public servants, whatever their character, do their work. But it is said that military work is purely professional, and that therefore the President cannot judge of it. Nothing is more fallacious. There is the same practical test here as in all other modes of action. That test is progress and success. It takes science to build a ship, but it takes no science to judge correctly whether the builder you have employed is diligent at his work, or whether your ship, when completed, is a success or a failure. So the President cannot himself lead an army; but he can tell as well as any other man whether our armies are or are not energetically led; and when the battle is finished, or the campaign over, he can know as positively as anybody whether it has proved an advantage, or the reverse. If it has proved an advantage, it is his business to commend its leader, and, if practicable, to promote him; if it has proved otherwise, it is just as much his business, unless some valid reason can be shown for the failure, to supersede him, by some one believed to be more competent. This last duty should be exercised unflinchingly, without the slightest regard to personal interposition or to popular clamor. The President has no right to prescribe particular plans or movements. These belong solely to the officers, who alone are qualified, by military science, to determine them. But that there should be plans and movements of some kind, and that these should be carried forward to a successful issue, with all possible vigor, he is bound to secure.

We sincerely deplore the results of the recent elections, in some of their bearings. But so far as they are calculated to remind the President of past remissness in suffering this war to be unduly prolonged, and to stimulate him to new endeavor, we accept them as a benefit. The people will not, and should not, believe but that the undaunted host now under the old flag can plant it where they will. They are anxious it shall be done and done quickly, even though battle have to follow upon the heels of battle, and the path to final triumph be but one broad track of blood. Let the President henceforth grant no tolerance to those Generals who continue backward, and no favor to those Generals who go forward, except as it shall be earned by substantial success. Whatever else the people may mean, they certainly mean action. The President should take it as the lesson of the day, and enforce it, without fear or favor, upon the army and navy, of which he is the Commander-in-Chief.

Gov. Seymour and the War.

Gov. SEYMOUR has been elected. Of this result there can be no longer any doubt. He comes into office on the first of January—long after the draft will have been completed. He will send to the Legislature a Message embodying his views on the war,—but as they have already been fully set forth in his public speeches, that document can contain nothing very new. The moral effect of his election, both at home and abroad, will be considerable; beyond that, it is not easy to see how it can have any marked influence on the practical conduct of affairs.

We are inclined to think that Gov. SEYMOUR will not find his new position a bed of roses. His canvass has excited expectations which he will not find it easy to satisfy. He has been elected mainly by men who are discouraged by the inactivity of the Administration. His election is a protest against the immobility and inefficiency of our armies. Tens of thousands of true and loyal men have voted for him merely because they desired a change. Others had a vague idea that his election would stop the war,—prevent the draft,—reinstate habeas corpus,—release the country from taxation,—bring back the South to obedience, and without any more fighting, restore the integrity of the Union. How all this was to be done, no one knew. The ways and means were not brought into the canvass. But everybody saw that under the present régime everything was very badly managed; and the mass of mankind act upon palpable and acknowledged evils, rather than from any clear perception of the methods of their removal.

Gov. SEYMOUR, if he does anything at all, must meet these popular expectations. He will be called on to give more vigor to the war, and at the same time release the people from the burdens which war involves. He will be expected to sustain the Government, and withhold the aid which the Government requires. He must at once swell the armies and prevent the draft—fill the treasury and avert taxation—prosecute the war, and at the same time give the country all the blessings of peace. He will be utterly powerless to do any of these things. Unless he is willing to bring the State authorities into direct and armed collision with the National Government. He cannot lift a finger to thwart any of its measures. He cannot prevent the draft; he cannot discourage enlistments; he cannot diminish by a farthing the weight of necessary taxation; he cannot release a single prisoner from Fort Lafayette, nor protect from just punishment a single rebel spy in the prosecution of his calling. All these hopes—the offspring of delusion and falsehood—he must of necessity disappoint. The moment he should attempt to justify them by any such practical measures as would be required, he would stand forth an open and acknowledged accomplice in the rebellion; and none of his loyal supporters would tolerate that for a single moment.

Gov. SEYMOUR has but one course to pursue,—and this we are glad to see some of his most sagacious supporters are already pressing upon him. He must insist upon a more vigorous prosecution of the war. He must aid it by all the means in his power. He must bring all the powers and all the influences of his position to bear upon this result. He must urge vigorous counsels in the Cabinet, and decisive action in the field. This is the only way in which he can aid in bringing the war to a speedy end, consistently with the honor of the country and the loyal instincts of the people. Any other course will bring him into direct collision, not only with the Government, but with the patriotic impulses of the very men to whom he owes his election.

But he will find this course by no means free from obstacles. It will bring him into direct conflict with the leaders of his party, to whom he owes his nomination. He was selected as their candidate because he was known to be personally opposed to the war. He had declared at the very outset that "successful coercion by the North would be just as revolutionary as successful secession by the South." His whole public action had been in harmony with this declaration. He had contributed nothing to the war, or to the public enthusiasm which sustained it. On the contrary, he had denounced the action of the Government in every form, and had thus made himself the proper representative of those whose highest ambition is to restore the old political relations with the leaders of the South, and, by means of that, to renew their control of public power and patronage. He dare not run counter to their wishes, for he not only owes to them his present position, but all his hopes of future advancement depend upon their approval.

Gov. SEYMOUR's position is thus certain to be one of no little embarrassment. It remains to be seen how he will meet the difficulties by which it is surrounded. One thing is very certain:—if the Government at Washington is still capable of being stimulated to action by the pressure of peril, it can smile at any attempts which Gov. SEYMOUR may make to thwart or embarrass its prosecution of the war. Our own apprehensions, we are free to confess, turn upon that contingency. We fear the inactivity of the National Executive far more than the hostility of the Governor elect.

The Advance of Our Army.

The country will hail with hearty exultation the news that the Army of the Potomac is advancing upon the rebel forces in Virginia. Its inaction since the battle of Antietam, in the absence of any apparent reason, has weighed like a nightmare upon the public mind. The people began to suspect that no further attempts upon the rebel army were to be made this Fall,—and that our army was to go into Winter quarters, content with having saved Pennsylvania and Maryland, with the Capital at Washington, from rebel occupation. It is to the despondency and discouragement to which this suspicion gave rise, far more than to any other cause, that the result of the recent elections is due.

Now that the Army of the Potomac is actually in motion, the public heart will take fresh courage. The country will again begin to hope that the Administration intends to crush the rebellion,—not by time, not by delay, not by proclamations and the suspension of habeas corpus,—but by fighting. The people have long ago come to the conclusion that it can be done in no other way. It is a question of battalions and not of words,—of cannon, and not of "olive branches." We must conquer a peace, or we can have none; and the only possible way of ending the war is felt to be by fighting it through,—as promptly and as vigorously as possible. For the Army of the Potomac to go into Winter quarters now would be to act in defiance of this just popular sentiment, and, in the judgment of the country, to abandon all hope of subduing the rebellion. It would give the rebels time to recruit their strength, to augment their numbers and their supplies, to enlist the sympathy and cooperation of foreign Powers, and thus increase vastly their chances of final success.

The advance of the army inspires the hope of better things. So far as we can judge, that advance looks to the destruction of the rebel army. The movements, thus far, indicate a purpose on MCCLELLAN's part to cut the rebels off from railroad communication with Richmond,—to crowd them back into the Shenandoah Valley, and take Richmond before they can reach it; or to overtake and force them to a decisive engagement on the way thither. The fact that BURNSIDE and SIGEL are in the advance, gives assurance that the movement is to be pushed with vigor; and we trust that in whatever positions they may take, they are to be supported and maintained by the whole power of the army.

We have heard it suggested that the object of this advance on the part of Gen. MCCLELLAN is simply to interpose his army directly between the rebel forces and Washington, and thus protect the Capital. We trust there is no foundation for such an opinion. Washington has been "protected" in this expensive manner long enough. The war has been prolonged a year mainly that the Capital might be "safe." Its safety must now be secured by other means. Unless it can be made permanently safe by the destruction of the rebel armies and the extinction of the rebellion, it may as well be abandoned. Unless we are to have the Union restored, we do not need Washington for a Capital.

We take it for granted that this advance of Gen. MCCLELLAN upon the rebel army is a reality and not a sham,—that it means fight and not strategy, and that due care will be taken by the Government to secure from it substantial and decisive results.

A POINT OF SOME IMPORTANCE.—The National Intelligencer suggests, that under the Confiscation act of the last session of Congress, Gen. SHERMAN, Military Governor of Memphis, has no right to permit slaves who have escaped from service, and come within our lines, to return to their masters. Hitherto, while he refuses to allow them to be forcibly taken away, he has allowed them to return if they desire it. The Confiscation act provides that all slaves of persons in rebellion "escaping from such persons, and taking refuge within the lines of the army, shall be deemed captives of war, and shall be forever free." The Intelligencer deems this conclusive, and doubts Gen. SHERMAN's right to return them to Slavery, even with their own consent.

However the question of right may be decided, good policy would evidently dictate that Gen. SHERMAN should not permit their return. In the first place, they may be spies, and may have been sent within our lines for the express purpose of "returning" with such information as they can gather meantime. Their services, moreover, must be valuable to our army, and as they are captives of war, we are clearly entitled to them. We do not see why this particular class of "captives of war" should be allowed a freedom of action denied to all others.

Winter Work in the Southwest.

We suppose our various armies and military detachments in the Southwestern States will very soon now be beginning their Winter's work. We have a heavy column of troops in Northwestern Arkansas, and a column in Eastern Arkansas, on the line of the Mississippi. We have the large army of Gen. GRANT at Memphis, with detachments on the line of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, including the veteran force with which ROSECRANS lately defeated the combined rebel columns at Iuka and Corinth. We have in Kentucky the magnificent army lately under BUELL, but now headed by that valorous soldier, ROSECRANS. We have also considerable detachments at Nashville and at other points in Tennessee, which, in case of offensive forward movements, could be united with the main body or bodies. Beside all these, we have the late army of Cumberland Gap, in Western Virginia, which is prepared to coöperate either with the movements of the Southwestern armies or with the movements of Gen. MCCLELLAN.

These armies have done comparatively little during the Summer and Fall months. It has been a long season of indolence and repose. The soldiers, it is very true, have perhaps, after all, had enough work. They have had long lines of railroads to guard, posts to occupy, garrison duty to perform, curious and wonderful manœuvres to execute, and small detachments of them were continually falling into difficulty and danger, and frequently into the enemy's hands. But the result of it all has been loss and not gain, petty and inconsequential action, not combined and victorious movements. The Southwestern army, viewed as a whole, has been practically inactive, or engaged in labors which were fruitless. It has lost and suffered more by sickness and demoralization, consequent upon this condition of affairs, than it would have lost had it, after the fall of Nashville, been moved into East Tennessee, where it would certainly have put a check upon rebel operations, and menaced the Confederacy at very vital points. It is now quite evident that all our griefs and disasters in the Southwest have been owing to the amazing tactics and policy of Gen. DON CARLOS BUELL, from whom the country had hoped so much.

The army of the Southwest, like the army of Virginia, has been greatly strengthened of late by the addition of new recruits. Several of the Northwestern States have entirely filled their quotas of troops under both calls of the President; and a large proportion of them have been already sent to the field. We hear no complaints from that section of want of shoes or shirt-collars, no outcry about deficiency in supplies, arms or men. All that is needed there, as in the East, is bold and skillful leadership.

The work to be done in the Southwest is considerable; but not near as great as some might suppose from the vastness of the field. There are comparatively few points to be occupied in order to bring the whole region under Federal authority. The principal part of this work is in East Tennessee and on the Mississippi River, and the places to be reoccupied, and the strength of the rebel armies to be defeated, are all well known to the country. We most earnestly hope that now that everything is ready, that there are abundance of troops, that the weather is cool and favorable, and the work is practicable—that Gen. ROSECRANS, Gen. GRANT and Gen. MCCLERNAND will lose not a day in setting about it enthusiastically and determinedly. If the patience of the people of the East has been worn into disheartenment, that of the West has almost settled into despair.

MERCY TO THE SIOUX.—We are very glad to learn from Washington that it is not the purpose of the Government to deal in a sanguinary manner with the lately belligerent red men of Minnesota. The large number of "big Injuns," of all grades and dignities, and with all sorts of unpronounceable names, who had been condemned to the gallows, will be respited, and subjected to some punishment which will be more effective in preventing outbreaks in the future. The war, if such it may be called, is entirely over. A mere show of power on the part of the Government put an end to the difficulties; and Gen. POPE has had no use whatever for the large number of men that were assigned to his department. The whole thing seems to have been but a burst of rage on the part of the redskins, incited by the atrocious injustice to which they had been subjected; and their savage fury being raised, they fell upon the white settlers, and slew them indiscriminately. Most of the Indians who were condemned had given themselves up to justice, declaring their innocence, and asserting that the massacres were the work of a few bad men among them—as indeed seems to have been the case.

But while we think it well that the accused Sioux are not to be all hung, it will certainly be very bad policy to let them, or any of their tribe, remain in Minnesota. The exasperation of the settlers against the Indians continues intense, and they fiercely demand not only the execution of these men, but the entire extermination of the tribe—men, squaws and pappooses. They declaim loudly against the policy of the Government; and it is almost certain that, if it is carried out, and the Indians are permitted to remain in the State, they will be quickly taken in hand by the settlers and exterminated.

The whole tribe should at once be removed from Minnesota, and taken down to the Indian Territory; or, what seems still more desirable, the plan which has been proposed in the able though sanguinary pamphlet of Mr. TAYLOR, of Minnesota, should be carried out, and the tribe be removed to Isle Royale, in Lake Superior, where they will never more molest or be molested by the white man. The Sioux, who are east of the Missouri, say just 15,000 in number, with 3,000 warriors; and part of their annuities should be applied to getting them from Minnesota. This would pacify the settlers and save the Indians. There can be no rest nor safety for any one of them while they remain where they are.

THE ALABAMA PURSUED BY ENGLISH OPINION—JOHN BULL AVENGES HIS OWN OX.—Now that the bold rover SEMMES has taken to goring British oxen, his career is likely to be interrupted by the navy of the flag which has covered, in his case, so great a multitude of sins.

Upon receiving the information that Capt. SEMMES had disregarded the certificates of a British Consul, and in the face of the British Consular seal, regularly affixed to papers establishing the British ownership of certain property on board of a vessel captured by him, had deliberately proceeded to burn that property with the vessel which contained it, the British Consul in this City, we are informed, immediately took steps to represent these transactions most forcibly to Admiral MILNE, commanding Her Britannic Majesty's squadron in the American waters. The Admiral, upon receiving the representations of the Consul, forthwith ordered three British men-of-war in pursuit of the Alabama, with orders, as we understand, to overhaul that vessel of wrath, and convoy her to some British port, where her violations of international law may be judicially inquired into.

We do not desire the destruction of this scourge of the American seas by British hands. It becomes us to clear our own waters of our own rebels, and we should be sorry to have the work of Mr. WELLES done for him by Mr. Consul ARCHIBALD and Rear-Admiral MILNE. But, if the Alabama is only to be arrested in her merciless and lawless career by these means, we may at least be thankful for the relief which this arrest will bring to our commerce, and we hope that the incident may have a wholesome effect upon our British kinsfolk, who have been so ready with their sympathies in the service of the Confederate South.

From the career of Capt. SEMMES they may easily infer the difficulties they would be called upon to deal with were the Southern Confederacy once fairly established as a Power in the world. Into that Confederacy would rapidly be garnered all that is law-despising, disorderly, reckless, and prone to mischief in the American populations. That passion for military excitement and vagabond "extensions of area" which was unjustly imputed to the whole Union before the outbreak of secession, is native to the hearts of the men of the Gulf, and fostered by the economical conditions of Slavery. Its gratification would be sought in all directions, and at the expense of all nations. Capt. SEMMES, snapping his fingers at consular certificates in his fierce haste to destroy the "enemy's" property, is a lively type of the Confederacy as it would conduct itself were it a fixed fact in the world.

We trust that England will ponder the instruction which exists for her in this episode of the war, and that, in catching the Alabama, she may catch something more important still, a juster apprehension of the real nature and aims of the authority which has let the Alabama loose upon mankind.

LACK OF FUEL IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.—The rebel States seem likely to be seriously incommoded by a failure in their supply of coal. The Richmond Examiner acknowledges, in a recent issue, the severe straits to which rebeldom is already reduced from the scarcity of this potent mineral, of which the North has heretofore furnished the chief supply. This writer draws a touching picture of the "homeless homes and shivering want," and of the "wistful gaze of men who offer double price in vain, as fuel cannot be had." The people, he adds, "are becoming restless under the present condition of affairs, and Government is urged to adopt some summary method of allaying popular discontent."

This want of coal in rebeldom is not to be wondered at. Of the 156 millions of tons produced in the United States during 1860, the loyal States yielded 134 millions; while of the 20 millions of tons obtained from States now accessible to the rebels, Virginia produced 9½ millions, Kentucky 6½ millions, Tennessee 3½ millions, and the rest of the Slave States only 158,000 tons.

Thus it is evident that Kentucky and Tennessee yield one-half of the coal which has been commanded by the Confederates. Now, according to present appearances, we shall soon cut them off altogether from the vast supplies of this as well as other munitions of war which they have too long enjoyed in these two States. If we succeed in this indispensable task, the coal which can be still procured in the South will be quite insufficient for the domestic purposes of the discontented people.

With such a scarcity of this contraband mineral, the manufacturing enterprise and the naval combinations on which so much boastful oratory has been poured forth will be checked, and, at least for the present, the subjects of King Cotton must count on the harassing hostility of King Coal.

Gov. Seward and Mr. Buchanan.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

We are just out of an election which should teach Republicans the necessity of Union among ourselves, if it teaches nothing else. Why, then, should the Evening Post continue its attacks upon Gov. SEWARD? The letter of yesterday, charging that Mr. BUCHANAN consulted with Gov. SEWARD constantly and daily during the last four months of his Administration is a malicious calumny. There is not the slightest color of truth in it. During that four months Gov. SEWARD did not, on any occasion, counsel with, or even speak with Mr. BUCHANAN, upon the subject of secession or rebellion.

Changes to Take Place in the Cabinet and in the Army.

Gen. Hunter to Again Command the Department of the South.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

THE FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

The feeling in Washington to-day, in view of the general success of the Democrats in the late elections, is one of plucky satisfaction. Most regard it as a rebuke of the Administrative feebleness of the Government, but fear that the effect will be still further to increase its timidity and irresolution. Secretary SEWARD was with the President quite early this morning, and Secretary CHASE soon afterward.

PROGRESS FOREIGN COMPLICATIONS.

Dispatches of the gravest importance, and which may effect a change in the whole aspect of the war, were re-ceived to-day submitted by the French Legation to the Secretary of State.

Gen. HALLECK expresses the belief that a foreign war, necessitating a levy en masse of our whole population, would make an evil without large compensating benefits. He expresses the belief that the North has not yet begun to develop its possible resources.

CABINET RESIGNS—RUMORED IMPORTANT CHANGES

An informal meeting of the Cabinet was held to-day, and an adjournment had to this evening, when it reassembles at 8 o'clock. Gen. HALLECK being present, on special invitation of the President. It is believed that decisions of more ultimate importance than any yet made in the course of the war, have been arrived at, and will be announced before the end of the week. The air is pregnant with rumors of military and Cabinet changes. Military changes are positive, and it is believed that certain Cabinet Ministers regard these changes as a condemnation, giving them no alternative but to resign.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH.

In consequence of Gen. MITCHELL's death, Gen. HUNTER will return to the Department of the South the moment he is relieved from duty on the Military Commission. Lieut. ROWARD W. SMITH, Fifteenth United States Infantry, has been commissioned as his Assistant Adjutant-General, with the rank of Major.

GEN. SIX'S THEORY OF THE REBEL OPERATIONS.

We have to-day heard the opinions of three Major-Generals, and these opinions are the reflex of all military opinions here, to the effect that the view of the rebel programme entertained by Major-Gen. DIX, and exclusively set forth in this column some days ago, is the correct one, and that the rebels are actively retiring, with a view of concentrating at Petersburgh, where Gen. LONGSTREET, with his vanguard, is already in command, for the purpose of making an attack on Suffolk and Yorktown, capturing the supplies and vast stores of heavy artillery left behind in the latter place on the abandonment of the Peninsula; and then making an attack in force upon Fortress Monroe, which Gov. LETCHER has declared to be the one point essential to the sovereignty of the State of Virginia and the safety of the Confederate Government.

THE PRESIDENT AND GOV. CURTIN.

Owing to reported disagreements between the Administration and Gov. CURTIN, the visit of the latter here, yesterday, was regarded as significant. Its object, however, was a conference, invited by the President, on military affairs generally, and particularly so far as they related to Pennsylvania. The Governor expressed anxiety for such a protection of the border, now that Gen. MCCLELLAN had changed his base of operations, as would be effective in preventing another invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania by the enemy. The President freely recognized the importance of the matter, and promised that should a necessity for more ample protection than that now made arise, proper steps would at once be taken to carry out the suggestions of Gov. CURTIN.

The subject of the order providing for enlistments of men for the regular army from the volunteers was touched upon, and the Governor expressed his decided belief that to carry it out now, while every nerve was strained to fill the volunteer regiments which, by the casualties of the field, had been reduced to mere skeletons, would be attended with serious dissatisfaction. The putting of drafted men into old regiments was also discussed, the Governor, while expressing an earnest desire to further in every way the filling up of old regiments, stated that the law under which the draft was made, distinctly provides that the men so drafted shall elect their own officers, and that the men in all the camps refused to come at the other arrangement. He would, nevertheless, render every possible aid to the Government in any measures best calculated to improve the condition of the army and to speedily conquer the enemy.

The interview was of a character entirely friendly, the reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 154.

It is understood that the General Order of the War Department authorizing the withdrawal of men from volunteer organizations to fill the ranks of favored regulars, was drafted at Headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, and was transmitted for promulgation to the Adjutant-General, who published it substantially as received. The manifest injustice of the Order as originally published, has already caused its modification; and it doubtless will be still further modified in deference to the unanimous protest of volunteer officers against its provisions for the diminution of their commands. Such an order could not but have the effect of disastrously encouraging insubordination in the army,—any soldiers of volunteers who might receive unpleasant orders from their own officers, being thus given the option of deserting to the regulars at a moment's notice.

THE MODIFICATION OF GENERAL ORDER NO. 154.

The modification of the order to enlist volunteers into the regular army so as to require that only ten men be taken from each company or battery for regular regiments, will not have the effect of removing the dissatisfaction which prevails among volunteer officers. Many of the volunteer regiments are mere skeletons of from one to three hundred men, and if ten of the best men are selected from each company for the regulars, the officers and men remaining will be disgusted, and the result will perhaps be that Congress will obliterate all distinctions which now divide the army of the Union.

A NEW NAVY BEING BUILT.

There can be no doubt that the rebels are again making formidable progress in the construction of a navy. We published the fact a few days since, that the English ship-yards are being used for the purpose of building large iron-clads for the rebel Government; the payment for which it is nearly certain is made from English sources. Two of these vessels have been seen by one of the persons from whom our information is derived.

We have positive assurance, also, from Richmond, that the new Merrimac is finished, and that two other similar vessels are under way. All these facts, with the recent exploits of Capt. SEMMES, clearly indicate a hopefulness and fortitude on the part of the rebels, that promises a stubborn struggle in their subjugation.

MORE IRON-CLADS.

It will be seen, from the advertisement of the Navy Department, that the Government is not asleep to the necessity of preparing for the coming struggle for the protection of our coasts and commerce on the high seas, now threatened by British built men-of-war sailing under the rebel flag. One or more iron-clad steamers are to be constructed, of about 7,500 tons burden, including machinery, with masts, spars and boats of iron, and all other equipments necessary for an efficient cruising ship of war.

The general specifications will be furnished by the Department, and bids will only be received from parties known to be able to execute the work. Each vessel to be delivered at a specified Navy Yard on the Atlantic coast.

A GANARD EXPLODED.

The statement that the Navy Department has contracted with certain parties in the North for the capture or destruction of the pirate Alabama, is untrue. The Department,—which would, no doubt, be willing to pay handsomely for the accomplishment of that much to be desired object—has never even received a proposition on the subject from anybody.

THE INDIAN WAR IN MINNESOTA.

It is not believed that any capital punishment will be visited upon the hostile Indians in the Northwest, the policy of the Government being averse to such a treatment of the Indians who have given themselves up. It is the mission of Assistant Secretary USHER, now in Minnesota, to adjust these difficulties, avoiding, so far as possible, all collision with the State Government.

GOV. MORTON.

Gov. MORTON left for Harper's Ferry at ten o'clock this evening in a special train, tendered by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. He goes to visit the Indiana troops, and review the arrangements made by Col. W. T. DENNIS, Military Agent for the State.

THE WOMAN REBEL MAIL CARRIER.

Miss BUCKNER, the lady who was arrested, some days since, in the act of smuggling quinine and carrying a rebel mail through our lines, to-day cheaply purchased her release from imprisonment by taking the oath of allegiance to the United States of America.

REBEL SPIES CAUGHT.

WM. R. BURR, of the Seventh Virginia Cavalry, was sent down from Rockville on Tuesday, by the Provost-Marshal there, and turned over to Major BOSTON, who sent him to the Old Capitol prison. BURR has been living in Rockville ever since the battle of Antietam, and from his suspicious movements is supposed to have been a spy, in the service of the rebel Government.

MARSHALL KNIGHT and R. K. DAVIS, two citizens of Fairfax County, were arrested by some of our pickets on Monday, while prowling around our camps. They refused to take the oath of allegiance, and were accordingly sent to the Old Capitol.

DECISION OF INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU.

It has been decided by Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. C. F. ROSS, that the material used in the manufacture of silverware is exempt from taxation. Manufacturers are only to be taxed on the value of the ware over that of the bullion used in its manufacture.

PROPOSED CONTRACTS.

A NEW MILITARY PRISON.

Duff Green's "row" on Capitol Hill is being converted into a military prison, capable of holding from 1,500 to 2,000 persons. The buildings were formerly used as a "contraband" depot.

The proceedings having been submitted to the President of the United States, who made the following order:

IMPORTANT FROM CANADA.

Apprehensions of and Preparations for War with the United States—Movements of Troops—Political and Financial Movements, Etc.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

MONTREAL, Monday, Nov. 3, 1862.

An uneasy feeling has prevailed in this city for some time; an undefined apprehension that Britain is on the eve of a contest with the United States, in which, of course, Canada would be involved. The daily steamers from Quebec have been quietly bringing up shot, and of late shell and a number of Armstrong guns, and on the 1st inst., we were startled by the announcement that the Ariadne, one of the finest frigates in the British navy, had passed Father Point on her way to Quebec, where she is now lying. The Ariadne, it seems, has brought up two troops of artillery and a quantity of stores. It is now said that a regiment from Halifax is coming into Canada, and that at least 10,000 men will be concentrated in this city during the Winter. In a Provincial town there are always plenty of people who know far better than anybody else the why and wherefore of every movement of every European or American potentate or politician. They now say that Admiral WILMOT BLOCKADE of Bermuda is the cause of the reinforcement of the Canadian garrisons. How true this surmise may be, your readers can judge as well as your correspondent. I do hope, however, that nothing will occur to disturb the relations happily existing between this colony and the States. It cannot be doubted, that in the event of war, the population of Canada would espouse the cause of the mother country warmly, though not so enthusiastically as they did last Winter when the Trent affair occurred. The writings of Prof. GOLDWIN SMITH, and the support his anti-colonial opinions have received from certain classes at home, have somewhat weakened the fervency of Canadian attachment to the British Empire; but still, I repeat, it is not to be doubted that the people would rise to repel any invasion from south of the boundary line, and the struggle that would ensue, if hostilities were to commence, would be fierce, and entail terrible disasters on both sides.

Our wholesale merchants have of late been carrying on a sort of private war with the Customs authorities. Gold being at a premium in the States; or, in other words, your nominal dollar being depreciated, our merchants have contended that they should not be forced to pay ad valorem duties on imports from the States on the price of these imports in American money, but that a reduction should be made corresponding to the depreciation of your currency. It is fully three months since the quarrel commenced, and all sorts of manœuvres have been practiced,—some successfully, others without success,—to evade payment on the higher nominal cost price. At length, however, the Customs people have given way, and in future a reduction is to be made from the face of the invoice equivalent to the depreciation of your paper dollars. Thus a great obstacle to trade with New-York and Boston has been quietly removed. You may notice that the exploded system really imposed adverse differential duties on our commerce with the States. Now, you can go on depreciating your currency without thereby prohibiting commerce.

The two members of our Provincial Government who are going to England to negotiate for building the railway from Quebec to Halifax will sail, on Wednesday, the 8th inst., if the papers are to be believed. Some rumors circulate at the Exchange, however, that Mr. HOWLAND, the Finance Minister, will not go, but stay to superintend the financial arrangements in progress here, which consist in issuing Provincial notes of $100 and $500 each, payable one year after date, with interest at 5 per cent. If your American capitalists want to invest, now's their time to tender, and mind,—no tenders are to be entertained at less than par. The issue is to be of $1,500,000.

INTERESTING FROM PORT ROYAL.

Arrival of the Steamship Florida—Particulars of the Death of Gen. Mitchel—The Recent Captures, &c.

The United States steamship Florida, L. C. BARTON Commander, from Port Royal in four days, arrived yesterday morning.

She brings 40 prisoners taken from the prize vessels lately captured, and the sick from the South Atlantic blockading squadron.

The Florida sailed from New-York, Oct. 16, 1861, in the Port Royal expedition, and since then has been constantly employed on the blockade, and has made several valuable captures. She has participated in numerous expeditions against and encounters with the rebels, and as soon as the repairs are completed that compelled her to come North, will again depart for the scene of her late operations on the Southern coast, or perhaps to join Commodore WILKES' flying squadron.

OUR PORT ROYAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RAVAGES OF FEVER AT HEADQUARTERS—THE DEATH OF GEN. MITCHEL AND OTHER PROMINENT OFFICERS—GEN. BRANNAN IN COMMAND.

PORT ROYAL, S. C., Saturday Nov. 1, 1862.

I regret to have to announce the sad news of the death of Maj.-Gen. ORMSBY M. MITCHEL, who commanded this Department. He died at Beaufort, on Thursday, at 6½ o'clock in the evening, from a malignant fever, contracted here. But a week ago, we were suddenly visited by a type of fever, to which, it pains me to say, many of our chief officers have fallen victims, within the short period of a week. The doctors cannot agree in determining the name of the disease, which, in its symptoms and nature, has every appearance of yellow fever. Many adhere to the opinion that it is nothing else than yellow fever, while some assert that it is swamp fever, arising from the malaria of the surrounding marshy ground, and the mephitic exhalations of the soil; others again call it a coast fever, peculiar to this latitude. Among those of the former opinion are medical men holding the highest positions, whose opinions are entitled to weight. The disease is accompanied by all the symptoms of yellow fever, and, although not quite so rapid in its effects, it seems to be quite as fatal. The fact that the disease made its appearance so late in the season, induces the belief that it has been brought here from Key West or some other infected part, and does not arise from local causes. The dread pestilence seems to have confined itself to the immediate vicinity of the headquarters, where its worst ravages were made. Officers upon Gen. MITCHEL's Staff, and those immediately surrounding him, were the first attacked. The death of Capt. L. A. WARFIELD, which I mentioned in my last letter, was followed by that of Capt. J. C. WILLIAMS, Aid-de-camp to Gen. MITCHEL. These two cases were followed by the illness of Gen. MITCHEL's two sons, both upon his Staff, and Capt. J. J. REWELL, Assistant-Quartermaster, and then the disease spread so rapidly as to create great alarm and anxiety. The disease appeared to be so confined to that one spot—headquarters—that Gen. MITCHEL removed to Beaufort, but unfortunately too late. The seeds of the fatal malady had been sown here, which soon carried him away. On Thursday morning, Col. N. W. BROWN, of the Third Rhode Island Artillery, died from fever, and upon the evening of the same day the intelligence was telegraphed from Beaufort that Gen. MITCHEL was dead. His death cast a gloom over all, not only because of the loss of such a man, who had secured the love and esteem of all here, but our dismal forebodings were realized, and his death seemed to verify the conclusions which had been forced upon us, that when this monster attacked, there was no hope.

General O. M. MITCHEL is regretted by all. In the short period that he was here, he managed to win the love and confidence of his whole command. His benevolent projects for benefiting the negro, and his eminently practical course with regard to them here, will cause his memory to be cherished by every Christian. In his death our country has lost an able General, astronomy and science one of their most gifted sons.

His remains were deposited in the graveyard of the old Episcopal Church at Beaufort, yesterday, at 12 o'clock. The funeral was attended by Gens. BRANNAN, SAXTON, Admiral DUPONT and Capt. ROGERS, together with numerous other prominent officers of the army and navy. Rev. Dr. SPRAGUE, of the Forty-eighth Regiment New-York Volunteers, who was with him in his last moments, performed the funeral service.

You have, perhaps, received intelligence of the capture of two English vessels—the Bonita and Anglia—by the United States bark Restless, and brought into this port on the 30th ultimo by the gunboat Pembina. They were both taken while endeavoring to run into Bull's Bay, twenty-five miles north of Charleston. They carry very valuable cargoes, consisting chiefly of cloths, and will make a very rich prize for the fortunate vessel which took them. The cargo of the Bonita is valued at £120,000 sterling. They will both be sent North.

There are rumors that the rebels are in great force—said to be 15,000 strong—on the main land, near Port Royal Ferry, threatening Beaufort. No apprehension is felt, however, for the safety of the place.

I am happy to be able to state that Capt. J. J. REWELL and Gen. MITCHEL's two sons are said to be in a fair way of recovery.

I inclose the general order of Gen. J. M. BRANNAN, who succeeds to the command of this Department.

B. J. S.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, HILTON HEAD, PORT ROYAL, S. C., Nov. 1, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 47.—The Tenth Army Corps will learn with regret of the death of its Commander, Maj.-Gen. O. M. MITCHEL, who departed this life at 6½ o'clock, on the evening of the 30th October, 1862, at Beaufort, S. C.

Maj.-Gen. O. M. MITCHEL was a graduate of the Military Academy, West Point, 1829, but retired from the army after a short period of service, until the danger of his country again called him to arms. At the outbreak of the present rebellion, and in the West, where he commanded a division of our army as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, he proved himself to be a gallant and efficient commander.

Brief as his career in the Department of the South, yet had he, already, won the esteem and regard of all, by his energy and activity, in directing the movements of the corps, against the adjoining rebels, and the firmness and tempered justice with which he conducted the administrative duties of the Department.

He died with the calm fortitude of a believing Christian, and while we lament the death of a gallant soldier, and a kind friend, let us endeavor to emulate the virtues and soldierly qualities of our late Commander.

As an appropriate tribute of respect to his memory, on the day following the receipt of this order, at every military post of this Department, thirteen minute guns will be fired, commencing at Meridian, and the flag of the Union will be displayed at half-mast, from that hour to sunset on the same day, and for thirty days the prescribed badge of mourning will be worn by the officers of the Tenth Army Corps.

J. M. BRANNAN,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

OBITUARY.

The Late Gen. Richardson.

A brief message comes by telegraph, announcing that Maj.-Gen. ISRAEL B. RICHARDSON died at Sharpsburgh on Monday night, of wounds received in the battle of Antietam. So great a loss was seldom told in so few words. The nation is called to mourn one of its stanchest supporters, the army one of its most gallant leaders. His comrades in battle—and in few battles has our flag been borne where "Fighting Dick" did not lead the van—will learn their loss with heavy hearts, and for his death alone the future historian will write the victory of Antietam dearly bought.

Gen. RICHARDSON was born in Burlington, Vt. He entered West Point early in life, and graduated with honor. In the Mexican war, where the making of splendid names was less sudden than in the present contest, there were three names that were seldom absent from the Commander-in-chief's dispatches—RICHARDSON, RINGGOLD and ROBERTS. At Cerro Gordo, a First Lieutenant commanding his company, the young hero's brow was sprinkled with fire, and he received the baptism of "Fighting DICK;" for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, he was brevoted Captain, and at Chapultepec—one of the little storming party that swept like a steel crested wave over the heights—he won his majority. Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco and Chapultepec—a prouder record no man need ask. Promotion in those days, when it was thought a soldier did only his duty when he stood like a wall and fought like a lion at bay, was slow and must needs be well merited, but seldom were a Major's spurs speedier won or better earned.

When his country had no further use for him, seemingly, Major RICHARDSON left the army for a farm in Michigan. But he did not beat his sword into a plow-share—it hung ever bright and ready to his hand against the time when his country should need it. He forestalled the President's call for men, and had a regiment well-nigh organized in his State by the time the Proclamation came rolling over the prairies. With "Fighting Dick" to lead them, men soon were found to follow. But he was not suffered to remain a Colonel long. He needed no introduction to his old commander at Washington, and a few days found him in command of a brigade with a General's star on his shoulder. On the disastrous day which hurled back our army in broken fragments upon Washington, he was conspicuous for his coolness and bravery, and if individual heroism could have turned the tide of battle, it would not have gone against us. When news of the rout and shameful retreat were brought to Gen. SCOTT's ears, almost his first question was, "Where was my Fighting Dick?" The record of the day told. When the Army of the Potomac made its memorable advance upon Manassas, in March last, the writer of this stood with Gen. RICHARDSON around the deserted fortifications at Centreville. "These are formidable works and a strong position, General," we remarked. "Yes, but a much smaller army of us took Chapultepec," he replied.

When the route to Richmond was changed, and the Peninsula was made the point d'appui, Gen. RICHARDSON was made a division commander, and subsequently promoted to a Major-Generalship for his behavior at Harrison's Landing. His connection with the battle of Fair Oaks will not soon be forgotten. In the retreat from the Peninsula, Gen. RICHARDSON achieved distinction for the prudent and skillful handling of his division not inferior to that he had previously won for valor in the field. In the battle of Antietam he received the wound that caused his death. He was leading a regiment that had shown signs of wavering under a fierce artillery fire, when a shell, bursting, struck him in the left breast, and his aids bore him from the field. "Tell Gen. MCCLELLAN," said he, "that I have been doing a Colonel's work all day, and am now too badly hurt to do a General's." He was never called on to do duty again. To the only command that could call him from his country's he yielded.

In person Gen. RICHARDSON was full and commanding; six feet in height, broad chested, powerful in sinew, with an eye like an eagle's, and a voice that rang out above the shrilling of trumpets. He was scarcely the man that even a chivalrous Southerner would select for a personal antagonist on the field. His New England birth betrayed itself in his accents, but none ever joked him for being a Yankee. In manners and dress he was eminently unpretending, and seen sitting in the door of his tent in slouched hat and only semi-uniform, would be selected by the curious observer rather as the type of a farmer than the ideal of a General. But seen on the field of battle, and his character and rank could not easily be mistaken.

In our brief sketch we have been able to give but a very imperfect idea of the man or of his life. But the biography of a man with whom deeds took the place of words, who acted while others talked, who was in the field before the President called him out, and left it only when the summons of death came, who never had a private quarrel in his life, but was never out of one of his country's battles when it was possible to be in it—the biography of such a man is not to be written in newspaper limits. As soldier and as citizen Gen. RICHARDSON served his country all his life. He never drew his sword without crowning her with honor, and only ceased her cried when he died.

In the Second District, Blair, Radical, is undoubtedly elected by a handsome majority. Returns from the interior are meagre, but the Emancipation ticket is probably elected.

KANSAS ELECTION.

LEAVENWORTH, Wednesday, Nov. 5.

Scattering returns from this State indicate the election of the entire Republican State ticket. Wilder, Republican, for Congress, is probably elected over Parrott, Union, and Matthias, Democrat.

SOME PUMPKINS.—In the olden days, when animal life reached such remarkable development, it is perhaps fair to infer that vegetables also attained considerable size. Could we stumble on fossil potatoes in any of the great hills of earth we might, perchance, find one that would put all Mammothdom, Mastodonia, Saurians and such other fossil relics of antediluvianism to the blush. But we question whether even the pumpkins of Paradise quite equaled some specimens Mr. June has on exhibition in his American Agricultural office. Nature aids us to believe that six pumpkins, weighing in the aggregate three hundred and ninety-three pounds, grew on one vine; then having swallowed these pumpkins she shows us four more weighing 302 pounds, the product of one vine; then two, which weigh 430 pounds; then one that weighs on its own account some 200 pounds; and, finally, A SPECIMEN OF PUMPKIN-EYED YELLOW-FACED IMPUDENCE—THE SIRES OF THE PARENT STOCK—WEIGHING IN THE AGGREGATE TWELVE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINE AND A-HALF POUNDS! There's a garden scene for you.

Think of it. Two brother pumpkins weighing more than 600 pounds apiece. What a destiny they are capable of! We might send them to Congress—they would much better represent the North than the brothers Ben and Fernandy can, and if they did no good, could at least do no harm.

Or getting a monster mortar—or a huge rifled cucumber—we could bombard the South with them. Pumpkins would be quite as effectual to hurl at secession beyond our reach as proclamations.

It is idle to ever apprehend famine with such vegetable resources as these at hand. One such pumpkin would make pies for all New-England, and the surplus feed an army. A Cinderella's coach, built from a pumpkin of this pattern, would be as large as an omnibus, and the mice that would draw it must needs be as large as mules. The Pumpkin Eating Peter, of the nursery rhyme, could very well keep a seraglio in such a pumpkin shell—let alone a single wife.

We can go the solitary pumpkins of Massachusetts well enough. They very probably are either blasted bachelors or else the heads of families—Aldermen of Democratic Wards in Pumpkinshire and future candidates for the Mayoralty, perhaps. But the family of forty-two, all Gogs and Magogs at the breast, so to speak—weighing in their entirety twelve hundred and odd pounds—these exercise our faith in Nature and Mr. June pretty strongly; and, if such a thought were admissible, would tempt us to doubt the honesty of one or the other—or both. Think of it. The old simile of fruitful as a vine falls, and only pumpkin vine, specified, can express how far fruitfulness can go. But the husbandman may learn a pregnant lesson; for had he been hasty to cut down the vine that cumbereth—or cucumbereth—the earth, this had not arrived at maturity. Mr. June's office is certainly worth a visit—if only to see to what favors pumpkins may come at last.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The regular quarterly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce will be held to-day at one o'clock. Hon. Townsend Harris, late Minister to Japan, will be present, and be introduced to the Chamber.

KNOX AGAIN.—What's in a name? And yet we serve in the discussion going on as to whether Knox, the hatter, of No. 212 Broadway, is descended from old Revolutionary Gen. Knox, that we feel inclined to add a word also. The present Knox is a resolute Scotsman in Scotland, and his Fall styles are confident to overthrow thrones, if beauty and grace can turn rebellious. KNOX and HAT are synonymous.
